Soros: Quantum of Chaos

FOREWORD

International hedge fund tycoon George Soros is the closest the world has ever witnessed to a true James Bond-like villain. Bond creator Ian Fleming could never have dreamt that one day a composite of some of his most evil and dangerous nemeses would be personified in an actual person. Yet, Soros's international exploitative operations are a carbon copy of many of Bond's enemies. This book recounts over ten years of news reports about Soros, an actual "quantum of chaos."

In 2010, when Britain's Ml-6's iconic super-spy took on a shadowy cabal who targeted Bolivia with a coup d'etat in order to depose that country's progressive president, Soros decided the cabal, known as "Quantum," all-too-closely resembled him and his global enterprises. Soros and his investment managers and colleagues made a bid for the Bond franchise's production company, EON Production of London, as well as its corporate parent, MGM. The historic Hollywood production studio suddenly found itself in financial difficulty and became ripe for a "vulture" takeover by Soros and his ultra-wealthy friends.

Soros's backroom deals to steer "Bond" away from uber-rich villains who resembles Soros failed when Soros's friend, Leonard Blavatnik, a Soviet Jewish emigre, pulled out of the deal. Blavatnik was reputedly Britain's richest businessman while Soros clocked in at number three.

Amid the Soros takeover bid, EON Production, the Bond franchise production company of Barbara Broccoli and Michael Wilson, halted production on the film that was due to star, once again, actor Daniel Craig in the leading role of James Bond. Broccoli is the daughter of famed Bond film producer Albert Broccoli, who narrowly escaped dying after he canceled his ticket on BOAC flight 911 enroute from Tokyo to Hong Kong. Flight 911 crashed on March 5,1966, near Mount Fuji shortly after takeoff, killing everyone on board. Broccoli was in Japan scouting locations for the next Bond movie, which was, interestingly, You Only Live Twice.

As a result of the failed Soros takeover attempt, the next Bond movie, "Skyfall," provided more clues as to the identity of the mastermind of Quantum. The mysterious villain continued to profit handsomely from international terrorism, wars, and other mayhem.

In the Bond movie SPECTRE, it is revealed that Quantum and all of the other recent Bond opponents is led by a single individual, Ernst Stavro Blofeld, a trillionaire who engineers coups, terrorist attacks, revolutions, and social upheavals. Blofeld's capitalizing on global bedlam bears an amazing resemblance to Soros's brand of "chaos capitalism," a "quantum of chaos,'' if you will.

Blofeld uses an alias in his international business dealings, Franz Oberhauser. In real life, Soros is also an alias. The hedge fund mogul's actual name is Gyorgy Schwartz. Soros originally hails from Hungary. Many have pointed out that Soros is a constructed name like one of Bond's other villains, Auric Goldfinger. if the two "S" letters in Soros's name are replaced with dollar signs -- ORO -- the monetary symbols encloses the word "Oro," Spanish and Italian for gold.

As a teen, Soros and his father Tivadar, both Hungarian Jews, cooperated with the Hungarian Nazi Arrow Cross government and the German Gestapo to track down Hungarian Jews, inventory their property, and helping to arrange their transportation to concentration camps. Tivadar was a major promoter of Esperanto, the global language invented in 1887. Tivadar changed the family name from Schwartz to Soros in order to assimilate into the gentile population of Hungary. Tivadar claimed he chose the name Soros because it was Esperanto for "to soar."

It is, indeed, a topsy-turvy world when a James Bond movie presents more actual news about what is happening in the world than does, well... the news. The movies "Quantum of Solace" and SPECTRE were probably the best since "Tomorrow Never Dies," the movie that portrayed a Rupert Murdoch-like character named Eliot Carver whose worldwide media empire manipulates news to advance his own sordid agenda.

SPECTRE wrapped all of the organizations that manipulated world events for profit and political power into a single paragon of evil, Blofeld or Oberhauser. In real life, the character could easily be Soros or Schwartz.

The "SPECTRE" and "Quantum of Solace" screen writers appeared to have agreed. MI-6's enemy is a secret, almost unknown, global group of politicians and businessmen called the "Quantum Group" that has infiltrated the top echelons of the British, American, and other governments and manipulates the financial and political worlds to achieve maximum profits. Compare that to Soros bankrolling the presidential campaigns of Barack Obama and Hillary Clinton and the true menace posed by Soros and his interests becomes very clear.

Making things more dangerous is the fact that Quantum, which is controlled by Blofeld, has penetrated the inner circle of MI-6. Again, in real life, the connections between Obama's close security adviser John 0. Brennan, who is also the Central Intelligence Agency director, and the Saudi government is unsettling. The Saudis are the chief funders of terrorist groups like the Islamic State of Iraq and the Levant (ISIL), all the "Al Qaeda" franchises, from Afghanistan to the Maghreb in North Africa, and Salafist radical indoctrination centers around the world.

At the top of the Quantum syndicate, which was but one small part of Blofeld's larger empire, was a Russian oligarch who controlled Siberian oil reserves and an ex-Mossad Israeli who has captured control of the global telecommunications industry. Of course, such a script would have not seen the light of day if Hollywood had anything to say about it. But Bond movies are heavily influenced by British writers and directors and the MI-6 has had, over the years, more than a passing interest in Bond scripts. And since Britain has been the most plagued country in the world, other than Israel itself, when it comes to penetration of government by Russian-Israeli mobsters, last few Bond movies added close advisers to the British Prime Minister as top players in "Quantum." The mind boggles at who the writers had in mind and the names Tony Blair, Peter Mandelson, and the late Boris Berezovsky -- who died under very mysterious circumstances in his English manor home - immediately come to mind.

Quantum Group, through a phony environmental company called Greene Planet headed by villain Dominic Greene (French actor Mathieu Amalric), had already overthrown the government of Haiti because the priest they elected president (Jean-Bertrand Aristide) had the temerity to raise the minimum wage to $1.00/hour. The unscrupulous people behind Quantum did not like it that their cheap Haitian labor pool that made T-shirts in sweat shops was being paid so much. So Quantum overthrew the priest-president in a coup. In real life, Bill and Hillary Clinton have made Haiti their virtual vassal state, one in which Aristide is constantly confronted and stymied by politicians on the payroll of the Clintons and Soros.

In ''Quantum of Solace," Quantum sets its sights on a leftist President of Bolivia (Evo Morales). Quantum sought to replace the Morales-like character with an ex-Bolivian Army General who would quickly sign away Bolivia's oil and water supplies to, of course, Quantum. The plan had the support of Quantum contacts in MI-6 and the CIA. In real life, the CIA has repeatedly attempted to overthrow Morales through coups and secessionist uprisings.

"Quantum of Solace" was a sequel to the Bond movie, "Casino Royale" and it is discovered that the Quantum/Russian-lsraeli mob is the same criminal outfit that Bond was chasing in Madagascar and Montenegro in "Casino Royale."

This book will show that Bond's chief nemesis, Blofeld/Oberhauser, does have a real-world version in George Soros. Make no mistake about it - Soros is the personification of evil. Soros admitted in a "60 Minutes" interview that he had no regrets helping his father identify fellow Hungarian Jews to the Nazi Gestapo in wartime Hungary in return for their own safety.

On "60 Minutes," Soros revealed to reporter Steve Kroft that 1944, the year he turned in Jews to the Gestapo, was the best of his life. The following is the "60 Minutes" transcript from December 20,1998:

KROFT: My understanding is that you went out with this protector of yours who swore that you were his adopted godson.

SOROS: Yes. Yes.

KROFT: Went out, in fact, and helped in the confiscation of property from your fellow Jews, friends and neighbors.

SOROS: Yes. That's right. Yes.

KROFT: I mean, that sounds like an experience that would send lots of people to the psychiatric couch for many, many, years. Was it difficult?

SOROS: No, not at all. Not at all, I rather enjoyed it.

KROFT: No feelings of guilt?

SOROS: No, only feelings of absolute power.

For years, this editor has written about the menace of international manipulators like Soros. This book is a compendium of a series of articles written in WayneMadsenReprt.com [WMR].

Often, life imitates art and George Soros imitates more than one Bond villain. Soros is a true "quantum of chaos."

Chapter 1 - Soros, a violator of the U.S. Logan Act

[This article appeared in WMR on September 9, 2008]

So-called "progressive" philanthropist George Soros, an international troublemaker who personally profits from each street rebellion and coup he finances, is in violation of two U.S. laws that forbid private U.S. citizens from engaging in warfare and carrying out their own foreign policy. The Neutrality Act forbids American citizens from participating in acts of war against nations with which the United States is at peace. The Neutrality Act has been used rarely by the Justice Department, most recently its violation being used in June 2007 to charge former Royal Lao Army General Vang Pao and nine other Americans with violating the Neutrality Act after an investigation dubbed "Operation Flawed Eagle." The group was charged with plotting to overthrow the government of Laos.[1]

1 In 2009, the U.S. Justice Department dropped all charges against Wang Pao. The general died in 2011.

The Logan Act of 1799, amended in 1884, makes it a felony for an American citizen to conduct foreign policy without authority. Although it has rarely been invoked, American politicians and celebrities who traveled to North Vietnam, Cuba, and Sandinista Nicaragua in the 1980s were threatened with charges under the law.

George Soros, much like the plotters against Laos, has funded and otherwise supported a number of acts of insurrection directed at nations with which the United States is at peace, including Georgia, Ukraine, Serbia, Belarus, Russia, Kyrgyzstan, Lebanon, Myanmar (Burma), Haiti, and Kenya.

Soros's Open Society Institute, has funded, since 1995, a Haitian non-governmental organization, the Foundation of Knowledge and Liberty (FOKAL), and its one-time director, Michele Pierre-Louis.

Pierre-Louis now serves as Haiti's Prime Minister under President Rene Preval. Preval became president after an interim administration imposed on Haiti by United States, French, Canadian, and UN troops after democratically-elected President Jean-Bertrand Aristide was overthrown with the help of the CIA, U.S. Special Forces, and U.S. mercenary personnel on February 29, 2004. The U.S. Army's Operation "JADED TASK" helped launch the coup against Aristide from the neighboring Dominican Republic. Aristide currently lives in exile in South Africa and is prohibited by the U.S.-installed government of Preval and Pierre-Louis from returning to Haiti. Pierre-Louis fits the mold for Soros-backed leaders around the world, having studied economics at Queens College in New York.

In June 2008, Soros was present at a ceremony in Budapest at which former UN Secretary General Kofi Annan was awarded Soros's Open Society Award by Soros-founded Central European University. Annan was given the award for his mediation efforts between the Kenyan government and the opposition Orange Democratic Movement led by Raila Odinga, who later became Prime Minister of Kenya. Odinga is the son of Oginga Odinga, a 1960s political colleague of Barack Obama, Sr., the late father of Democratic presidential candidate Barack Obama, Jr.[2] Not coincidentally, the Kenyan opposition's use of the term "orange" matches with Soros-funded opposition movements in Ukraine and Moldova. In the case of Ukraine, a pro-U.S. president came to power in January 2005 after the election of pro-Russian Viktor Yanukovych was overturned.

2 Barack H. Obama, Jr. was elected president of the United States in November 2008.

Soros has also funded the Kosovo Office of the Open Society (KFOC), which was at the forefront of the movement for Kosovo, a region of Serbia, to declare independence unilaterally. The KFOC has been instrumental in obtaining recognition for Kosovo from a number of countries, especially those where Soros has a substantial NGO presence, including Haiti, Liberia, Sierra Leone, Czech Republic, Latvia, Estonia, Lithuania, Bulgaria, Poland, and Turkey.

Soros is a close friend of Liberian President Ellen Johnson Sirleaf, a former Vice President of Equator Bank in Washington, DC. Equator was later bought by HSBC, which, not surprisingly is a financial partner of Soros. Soros is also a friend of Sierra Leone Foreign Minister Zainab Bangura, formerly vice president of one of Sierra Leone's largest insurance firms.

Chapter 2- Soros's destabilization of the Balkans

[This article appeared in WMR on June 3, 2008]

George Soros, the multi-billionaire funder of progressive causes, has made no secret of his desire for drug legalization. The wish has made Soros a darling for not only progressives but libertarians as well. However, according to FBI sources, Soros's support for the destabilization of the Balkans, particularly the cause of Kosovo's independence, has enabled drug trafficking in the region to increase exponentially. FBI intercepts of Turkish and Albanian intercepts have shown collusion between certain Western "pro-democracy" nongovernmental organizations (NGOs) and the Kosovo drug trade.

Soros's Open Society Institute (OSI) and his stewardship of Radio Free Europe/Radio Liberty helped elevate, with the help of then-Secretary of State Madeleine Albright, Kosovo Liberation Army (KLA) leader Hashim Thaci from terrorist thug and drug and arms smuggler to Prime Minister of an independent Kosovo. Kosovo, along with Israel and Greek Cyprus, now plays host to organized criminal syndicates from around the world, particularly elements of the Russian-Israeli mafia and its affiliates.

Independent Kosovo now serves as an important hub for the distribution of heroin from Afghanistan and cocaine from Colombia (mostly via Guinea-Bissau in West Africa). Afghanistan and Colombia are both surrogates of the United States and examples of the marquis "democratization" pushed by OSI and Freedom House and the International Crisis Group, other contrivances funded by Soros. The Albanian government, also enmeshed in drug smuggling, provides important diplomatic and political cover for the Kosovo criminal syndicates.

Kosovo-based narco-terrorists now threaten neighboring countries. Recent violence in Macedonia's election can be traced to Albanian Kosovo-based provocateurs who have been able to stir up Albanian minority passions thanks to Soros's insistence that Albanian be granted second official language status in largely Slavic Macedonia. Montenegro is similarly plagued by Kosovo Albanian smugglers who operate freely from the southern part of that nation.

Chapter 3 - Soros's double-dealing in the Caucasus

[This article appeared in WMR on August 11, 2008]

WMR has learned details of so-called "progressive" cause donor George Soros in the underlying turmoil between Russia and Georgia in the Caucasus.

In 1994, Soros set up shop in Tbilisi, the Georgian capital, to engineer what would become known as the "Rose Revolution," carried out ten years later. Soros's Open Society Institute (OSI) jointly pumped tons of money into programs designed to propel Georgia's neo-con President, Mikheil Saakashvili, to power in a November 2003 coup that toppled Georgia's President Eduard Shevardnadze, the last Foreign Minister of the Soviet Union, from power. The OSI money was mostly spent on training neocon political operatives loyal to Saakashvili and his party and influencing the Georgian media. Media manipulation is a favorite tactic of Soros, one that he has used effectively to curb the power of the American progressive liberal movement.

After the Rose Revolution, Soros and United Nations Development Program (UNDP) director Mark Malloch Brown launched the Georgia Development and Reform Fund that was designed to curb corruption in Georgia. However, the fund was actually used to pay increased salaries for employees of the Georgian President's office and the National Police. The $40 million pumped into the fund was matched dollar-for-dollar between OSI and the UNDP. The salaries for Georgia government apparatchiks and police bought loyalty for Saakashvili and Soros in the country.

The Tbilisi daily newspaper 24 Saati ("24 Hours") discovered the source of the fund was a Cyprus-registered "charity" called "Golden Fleece." The Development and Reform fund was managed by an old Saakashvili crony, former deputy Justice Minister Konstantine Kublashvili, who served under then-justice Minister Saakashvili during the Shevardnadze presidency. Kublashvili told Radio Free Europe/Radio Liberty's Georgia Service that there was no "dirty money" involved in the Golden Fleece charity.

However, WMR has learned that was not what was discovered by the "Georgia shop" at the National Security Agency's (NSA) Medina Regional Security Operations Center (MRSOC) in San Antonio, Texas. A special and highly-secure unit at the MRSOC that monitored financial flows to the region discovered the links between Golden Fleece in Cyprus -- Cyprus is a center for Russian-Israeli mob activities -- and Russian-Israeli oligarchs who were trying to oust Russian President Vladimir Putin from power.

After leaving the UN, Malloch Brown became Vice Chairman of Soros's Quantum Fund, Soros's flagship hedge fund, as well as Vice President of Soros's OSI.

In 2004, Soros, using his "Democracy Alliance," which represented nothing more than a hostile takeover of the Democratic Party by globalist forces represented by Soros and his friends, pooled and bundled campaign contributions for a number of Democratic candidates, earning him the same loyalty that similar bribes bought him in Georgia. Soros convinced organizations and web sites he funded, including MoveOn.org, DailyKos, Democratic Underground, and others to launch an anti-Halliburton campaign. Halliburton was engaged in the construction of the Baku-Tbilisi-Ceyhan pipeline that pumped oil from Azerbaijan through Georgia to the Turkish deep water port at Ceyhan on the Mediterranean coast.

The campaign by Soros against Halliburton worked. The firm began divesting itself of its Kellogg, Brown & Root subsidiary in early 2006. As the result of the Soros effort against Halliburton, the company's stock plummeted from $40 a share to $26 a share. Soros, a longtime hedge fund and currency speculator who profits from crises and financial collapses, bought 2 million shares of Halliburton at its low share price of $26 per share. He then, according to WMR's financial industry sources, ordered his "progressive" recipients of funding to ease off on their criticism of Halliburton. The result was that Halliburton shares increased to $50 a share. Soros earned a cool $40 million from his manipulation of the politics and finances surrounding Vice President Dick Cheney's old firm.

Soros's manipulation of the progressive media is highlighted in an article by Michael Barker, a doctoral student at Griffith University in Australia, titled "The Soros Media 'Empire.'" Soros's role in "democracy manipulation" is cited in the article: "The Soros Foundations' most recent annual report shows that Soros still remains a force to be reckoned with among democracy manipulators, as the entire Soros Foundations Network distributed over $400 million worth of grants in 2006."[1]

Saakashvili's own ties with "progressive journalists" linked to Soros are highlighted by his friendship with Scott Horton, a journalist with Harper's. Horton hired Saakashvili in 1994 to work for him at the New York law firm of Patterson, Belknap, Webb & Tyler after the Georgian graduated from Columbia Law School. Other Patterson, Belknap et al. alumni include former New York Mayor Rudolph Giuliani and current Attorney General Michael Mukasey. Saakashvili referred to Horton as his "colleague" at a July 2006 seminar at the neocon citadel, the American Enterprise Institute (AEI) in Washington, DC.

In January of this year, Saakashvili won the presidential election amid opposition charges of fraud. Opposition Labor Party officials charged that Saakashvili supporters voted more than once at multiple polling places. The verdict from Florida Democratic Representative Alcee Hastings, an impeached former federal judge, was that he saw no evidence of election fraud. Hastings was heading an election observer delegation from the Organization for Security and Cooperation on Europe (OSCE), an organization that has been co-opted by Soros.

In 2006, when Saakashvili's police arrested opposition leaders, Konstantin Zatulin, an exiled former Georgian security chief and leader of the opposition Justice Party, told Moscow's Ekho Moskvy radio station that one of those arrested in Georgia was the head of the "Anti-Soros Movement."[2]

Russia is taking intense heat from not only the neocon media in its reprisal against Georgian aggression against South Ossetia, but also from the usual Soros-funded "progressive" media outlets, print, broadcast, and web-based.

In 2012, after being defeated for re-election as president of Georgia, Saakashvili fled the country. He first moved to Brooklyn in New York and, after he was criminally charged in his native Georgia in 2014 for malfeasance in office, he moved to Ukraine where the U.S.-installed president there, Petro Poroshenko, named Saakashvili the governor of Odessa province. Organized crime and arms smuggling through the port of Odessa, including to ISIL units in Syria and Iraq, flourished under Saakashvili's governorship.

Chapter 4 - Other Soros manipulation

Soros has long preyed on Iceland's economy. WMR's sources reveal that during the winter of 2007-2008, Soros hedge funds were shorting the Icelandic krona. There are reports that the U.S. Justice Department is now investigating Soros's SAC Capital for shorting the euro and the British pound. (From WMR, March 29, 2010)

WMR's sources report that the Soros Private Equity group (since renamed TowerBrook Capital Partners) invested $10 million in TradeDoubler, a Swedish online provider and platform, in cooperation with the Icelandic venture firm Arctic Ventures. TradeDoubler handles online financial payments and transactions but mainly online advertising, and is big in online betting throughout Europe. The downfall of Iceland's banks was enabled by online banking and investment. Ragnar Thorisson, an Icelander, worked at VBS Securities before founding Arctic Ventures (where he invested in E-Trade Nordic). He then invested in Argnor, a wireless service provider. Ordinary members of the TradeDoubler Board of Directors include Niclas Gabran and Ramez Sousou of Soros Private Equity group, now TowerBrook Capital Partners. Thorisson reportedly sold his shares in TradeDoubler.

It is also noteworthy that TowerBrook is heavily invested in healthcare services and pharmaceuticals and stands to reap huge profits from President Obama's health care program. (From WMR, March 26, 2010)

Two world-renowned HIV/AIDS specialists, Dr. Arash Alaei and his brother, Dr. Kamyar Alaei, were arrested in late June in Iran for participation in what was termed "subversive activities."

However, WMR has learned from U.S. government sources that the reason the two brothers were arrested were because of contacts they made at international HIV/AIDS forums and seminars with individuals and organizations linked to global financier George Soros.

Iran, aware of Soros's activities in Georgia, Azerbaijan, Ukraine, Burma, Tibet, Kyrgyzstan, and other countries apparently feared that the two brothers were working with Soros to destabilize Iran.

Human Rights Watch, an organization partly funded by Soros, quickly called for the release of the Alaei brothers.

Iran is fearful of a "themed" Soros revolution that would be similar to Georgia's Rose Revolution, Lebanon's Cedar Revolution, and Ukraine's Orange Revolution. One Iran expert opined that in the case of Iran, it would be no surprise to see Soros behind a future "Pomegranate Revolution." Pomegranates originated in ancient Persia and spread to the East and West along the Silk Road. (From WMR, August 20, 2010)

On a December 29, 2008, email sent to MoveOn.org members, MoveOn head Eli Pariser asked MoveOn members to contribute to four progressive non-profit non-governmental organizations (NGOs) that were apparently caught up in the Bernard Madoff $50 billion hedge fund heist.

Pariser noted in his email that "victims included the foundations that support some really important progressive organizations. Groups that fight for human rights, fair elections and racial justice are getting hit hard."

The email solicitation for help for the progressive groups noted that George Soros's Open Society Institute will "match every dollar that comes in until January 1." The deadline gave individuals some three days during the holiday period to help progressive groups recover from the Madoff scam. It should be noted that Soros is also a major contributor to MoveOn.

The email did not name the foundations that were scammed by Madoff but did request financial help for your organizations impacted by the Madoff scam. They are the Brennan Center for Justice, Human Rights Watch, Advancement Project, and the Center for Constitutional Rights. The JEHT Foundation, which funded the four groups, was forced to close as a result of the Madoff Ponzi scheme.

The email does provide an important clue where Soros's money is distributed and the strings that are often attached to the contributions. Human Rights Watch, for example, has been accused of being onesided in the Congo/Great Lakes conflict, in being willing to parrot Rwandan and Ugandan propaganda about their respective roles in the Democratic Republic of Congo while failing to condemn the exploiters of the region's natural resources, especially diamond and gold mining operations run by Israeli companies and Israeli-linked mercenaries. (From WMR, January 2, 2009)

Chapter 5 - Soros penetration of Nepal

[This article appeared in WMR on December 26, 2008]

The corporate, neocon-controlled media is having their way again and the only casualty, again, is the truth. The corporate media has been wailing over the occupation of news media offices in Nepal by Maoist-affiliated unionists. What is not being reported is that the takeovers are no different than the occupation of a factory in Chicago by workers upset over their termination without severance pay.

The fact remains that the Maoist unionists occupied media offices of companies that refuse to unionize. And the targeted newspapers and the reaction are exposing the hidden hand of George Soros, the American-Hungarian-Briton who fronts for the House of Rothschild and continually violates the 1799 Logan Act, which prohibits Americans from engaging in their own foreign policies.

It is now apparent that several non-government organizations (NGOs) in Nepal are hyping the "Maoist threat" to freedom of the press in order to bring about 3 showdown between the Maoist government of Prime Minister Prachanda and elements in Nepal who are taking their orders from the CIA and its National Endowment for Democracy (NED) contrivances, and Soros-funded NGOs in Nepal. In a speech in New York in September 2008, Prachanda committed his government to freedom of the press. Another NGO agitator in Nepal s the extremely neocon-oriented Freedom House. In addition to Soros money, Ford Foundation funds are also backing the anti-Maoist NGO operations in Kathmandu.

WMR has learned from our Nepali sources that the Soros-funded NGOs in Nepal are adamantly opposed to unionization, something that should be expected from many leaders of the NGO community whose cheap talk about labor rights is usually not backed up by action. The Maoist-dominated unions have been agitated by the anti-union reporting by the newspapers they have targeted for labor action, particularly Kantipur Publications and Himalmedia.

The NED appears to be following the same playbook in Nepalas it has used in Venezuela, Bolivia, Ecuador, and Nicaragua in their attempt to foment rebellion against left-progressive governments. A review of NED's activities in Nepal in 2007 reveals its funding of the following programs:

American Center for International Labor Solidarity $225,000

To enhance workers' understanding of and participation in electoral processes and to strengthen independent unions' abilities to be professional and accountable to their membership, thus enabling workers to join unions that genuinely represent their interests. The Solidarity Center will provide support to two of Nepal's largest democratic trade unions for voter education and get-out-the vote efforts in the run-up to the Constituent Assembly elections, and for a trade union strengthening project in the post-election period.

Antenna Foundation Nepal $80,000

To raise awareness of the Constituent Assembly and the constitution-drafting process through national and local radio programs. Antenna will produce three radio programs focused on Nepal's political transition, including a live talk-show that allows listeners to call in and engage with program guests, and operate a mobile broadcasting platform that will travel to remote villages in an effort to improve access to information in rural areas.

Center for International Private Enterprise (CIPE)
$73,559

To support balanced and informed media coverage of business and economic reform issues in Nepal. CIPE will work with the Nepal Press Institute to develop and implement an in-depth training program for rural journalists on market economics, business development, good corporate governance practices, investigative reporting, and journalism ethics.

Nepal National Dalit Social Welfare Organization (NNDSWO)

$45,000

To increase Dalit participation in the political process in rural Nepal and to promote Dalit rights. The NNDSWO will conduct a wide-ranging program, including advocacy, empowerment programs, and capacitybuilding components to raise awareness among Dalits of their rights and encourage the full participation of Dalits in Nepali society and public life.

Youth Action Nepal

$18,000

To engage young people in the civic life of the country and to encourage youth organizations to take a more active role in the current political process. Youth Action Nepal will host a five-day study session on democracy and human rights and organize trainings and workshops on enhancing youth participation in the political process at the local and national level.

These NED activitie and others are suspected of being fronts for destabilization efforts against the Prachanda government.

Not to be outdone by NED, the CIA-connected U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) has established an Office of Transition Initiatives (OTI). OTI's Orwellian purpose is to "help advance Nepal's transition to peace and democracy." OTI is run out of the U.S. embassy in Kathmandu and the USAID Mission in Nepal's capital. WMR has reported from Nepal that the U.S. embassy in Kathmandu has been and remains a major CIA station on the Indian subcontinent.

The contractor for OTI activities in Nepal is Chemonics International of Washington, DC.

On November 14, 2008, WMR reported the following about Chemonics: "A favorite USAID contractor, Chemonics International, started in 1976 by conservative Republican Gerald Murphy, in part, because as he told The New York Times in 1993, 'I've always wanted a way to do two things: one, have my own C.I.A., and two, be helpful to people,' received $500,000 to support USAID field missions, but nothing says the money, supposedly for use in combating child trafficking, was used for that purpose."

DTI and Soros's Open Society Institute (OSI) are also linked through a contract awarded to Chemonics in Nepal to provide for U.S.-funded propaganda to be broadcast on FM stations in Nepal:" Increasing Access to Information via Radio - TMPKAT010 This activity will provide satellite uplink equipment to Communication Corner, a for-profit media organization and is the only legal satellite audio broadcasting organization of the country and is leverage resources with the Open Society Institute (OSI) who will subsequently provide a cash grant of approximately $380,000 (final figures not yet available). The overall program (Chemonics and OSI) will ensure free access to the satellite transmission to 32 FM stations throughout the country, provide radio programming air time free of cost to 8 leading production houses, and ensure the broadcasting of PSAs in support of transition related subject material. A memorandum of understanding (MoU) has been developed between OTI, Chemonics, and OSI.

Additionally, the 8 major production houses and the Communication Corner are in the process of developing and approving a Moll between them."

The Soros/USAID/Chemonics media blitz in Nepal is also funding Radio Kailash, targeting the Humla district of Nepal and Nepal Chautari (a national live radio call-in show). The U.S. propaganda network in Nepal can be identified by the U.S. embassy and USAID dignitaries who attended Radio Kailash's dedication in May 2008. They were: Deputy Assistant Secretary of State Evan Feigenbaum; Deputy Chief of Mission, U.S. Embassy, Nepal, Randy Berry; USAID/Nepal Mission Director Beth Paige; and OTI Country Representative for Nepal Melissa Rosser.

USAID/OTI is also targeting Madhesi journalists in the restive eastern and central Terai districts, an area also targeted by India's Research and Analysis Wing (RAW) for disruption against the Prachanda government.

On October 20, 2008, WMR reported from Nepal on the neocon attempt to foment secessionist activities in Nepal, including in the Terai:

"Already small secessionist movements are starting to menace Nepal's embryonic federal structure and the hidden hand of Delhi and Washington is obviously at play. Groups like the Madhesi Liberation Tigers of Terai, the Kirant Workers Party of Nepal's eastern hill district, Tamang National Liberation Front, the Tamu National Liberation Front, the Magarant National Liberation Front, the Mongol Liberation Army, the Janatantrik Tarai Mukti Morcha, the Terai Liberation Front; the Zimbuwan Liberation Front, and the Khambuwan Liberation Front have become very active. Although some of these secessionist fronts were allied with the Maoists in the civil war, many have become obstacles to the new government's federalist plans. The playbook is the same that is being used to stir up secessionism in Venezuela's Zulia state, Bolivia's energy resource-rich provinces, and Guayaquil in Ecuador."

In today's globalized world, wherever there are "do gooders" proclaiming they are helping to advance democracy, the hand of George Soros is never far behind and Nepal has proven to be no exception to the global neocon/Soros joint goals of suppressing unions and progressive governments.

Chapter 6 - Soros infiltration of various legitimate groups

[This article appeared in WMR on January 28, 2009]

WMR has learned from well-placed sources that international hedge fund mogul and financier of "progressive" causes George Soros has, for a number of years, been infiltrating 9/11 "truth" organizations, groups advocating election reform, and so-called "independent journalism" enterprises in order to hijack agendas and, eventually, cause the groups to collapse from within or be absorbed into larger organizations servile to Soros and his agenda.

By far, the largest group Soros and his allies has infiltrated and taken over is the Democratic Party of the United States. It now totally adheres to a corporatist line and has purged from its leadership Dr. Howard Dean and replaced him with Virginia Governor Tim Kaine, a Democratic Leadership Council adherent. The Soros faction and its allies has also seen to it that Bill Richardson, Caroline Kennedy, and others who represent the "Democratic wing of the Democratic Party" have been shut out of the Obama administration.

In many ways, Soros's operations is strikingly similar to the FBI's former Counter-Intelligence Program, also known as COINTELPRO. There is also ample evidence that Soros's program is linked to Israeli intelligence operations in the United States and that some presidential campaigns in 2008 were infiltrated by the joint operation, including those of Democratic candidate, former Senator Mike Gravel, and Republican candidate Ron Paul.

Soros's operations, according to our sources, involve his Open Society Institute, as well as Soros Fund Management LLC, in which his son Jonathan Soros plays a leading role.

For Soros, his political operations in America are much the same as they are in places like Ukraine, Georgia, Moldova, Romania, and other countries: divide, confuse the political sides, and conquer.

The modus operandi is that Soros operatives either help establish "progressive" organizations or join them after they are established with a new infusion of a modest to substantial funding. The agenda of the organization is then altered to make it look either like a far-out "conspiracy" association or the infiltrators of the organization create internecine battles between factions or tamp down its fervor. In some cases, the organizations ultimately cease to exist or are combined with other Soros-controlled or influenced organizations.

In the case of alternative journalism operations, Soros's operatives launch attacks, some of them highly personal, against bona fide independent journalists and question their sources and investigations. WMR has been a primary target for such operations, according to sources familiar with Soros's tactics.

Soros's agents of disinformation and influence have moved in to "manage" the stories about jailed Alabama Democratic Governor Don Siegelman, the 2004 vote fraud in Ohio, the Turkish and Israeli intelligence penetration of the highest echelons of the U.S. government, the presence of Israeli spies among the accused 9/11 hijackers in the months prior to the terrorist attacks on 2001, and Russian-Israeli "Kosher Nostra" criminal activity from London to Kiev and New York to Moscow.

Overall, Soros's operations are primarily focused on controlling the left through the use of censors and online gatekeepers in the media operations he funds. Recipients of Soros money are found running web sites, some of them well-known; hosting TV and radio programs; and writing regularly for major periodicals.

Soros has ingratiated himself to many on the Left but that was his goal. However, there are a number of progressives who are wise to Soros's operations and will continue to expose them regardless of how many more billions he amasses from shorting stocks, speculating on national currencies, and destroying jobs.

With the palindrome SOROS -- if you replace the "S's" with $ -- as in oro, you will be left with "oro," the Italian and Spanish word for "gold." It sums up Mr. Soros nicely, if that is his real name, and not "Goldfinger."

Chapter 7 - Soros's high-tech revolutions

This article appeared in WMR on April 24, 2009.

International chaos maker George Soros has tipped his hand on his future plans for "themed revolutions" in an op-ed written by the Washington Post's Anne Applebaum, the wife of Poland's neocon Foreign Minister Radoslaw (Radek) Sikorski.

In her April 21, 2009 column, Applebaum exulted in the fact that "fresh-faced young people reportedly used Twitter tweets, text messages and Facebook postings" to organize demonstrations in Moldova against the re-election of the nation's Communist government, an election that was ruled as fair by international observers.[5] 5 Anne Applebaum, "In Moldova, the Twitter Revolution That wasn't," The Washington Post, April 21, 2009.

Applebaum proceeds to show her Soros cards by bemoaning the fact that there was no Georgian and Ukrainian style ouster of Moldova's government. She wrote, "Alas, it is becoming clear that there was no Twitter Revolution in Moldova." Applebaum regrets that the demonstrators were not organized enough to carry out their themed revolution. Predictably, Applebaum sees the hidden hand of Russia behind the Moldova rebellion. She wrote, "Naturally, the president of Russia chimed in to condemn 'the mass disorder unfolding on the pretext of disagreement with the election results."'[1]

1 Ibid.

Moldovan President Vladimir Voronin quickly saw the Soros hand in the riots in his capital of Chisinau when he likened the rebellion to Soros-engineered themed revolutions in Ukraine and Georgia.

Applebaum also gave neighboring Romania, where Soros has a number of front organizations, a free pass on its own involvement with the failed revolution in Moldova. Many Romanian officials have made no secret of their desire to annex Moldova, Romania's one-time province of Bessarabia, which was peeled away by the Soviet Union in 1940.

Applebaum, in criticizing the Moldovan coup leaders for failing to organize properly to carry out their "Twitter Revolution" and be as successful as their comrades in Ukraine and Georgia, has a stark warning about future high-tech Twitter and Facebook themed revolutions elsewhere. She concluded her column with the following about Moldova: "Still, I predict this is a sign of more such 'revolutions' to come. A scenario like this one is too good to waste on Moldova alone."

The message from the Soros crowd is clear. Although Moldova's attempted high-tech themed revolution failed, there are plans to repeat the tactic in other countries. Soros's themed Orange and Rose Revolutions in Ukraine and Georgia, respectively, are on the brink of welcomed collapses and the weaning away of those nations from future NATO membership.

Soros's manipulation of themed revolutions was not only present with the Orange and Rose Revolutions but also the Tulip (or Pink) Revolution in 2005 in Kyrgyzstan, the 2000 October 5th Revolution in Serbia, and the 2005 Cedar Revolution in Lebanon. Soros was behind failed themed revolutions in 2005 in Armenia and Azerbaijan, in 2006 in Belarus (the "Denim Revolution'), in 2007 in Myanmar (the "Saffron Revolution"), another failed revolution in Moldova in 2005, in 2008 in Mongolia (the "Yellow Revolution"), the Bashkortostan Republic in Russia (another "Orange Revolution'), the Saffron Revolution in Tibet in 2008, the Cotton Revolution in Uzbekistan, and nascent themed revolutions in Iran and Venezuela.

Soros will undoubtedly try to influence the current counter-revolution against his tool Mikheil Saakashvili in Georgia by throwing money at the opposition in order to expand his influence in the country. However, in Georgia, Ukraine, Moldova, Slovakia, and other countries, Soros's tactics are becoming clear. Recently, a former top U.S. diplomat told WMR on background that the United States must stop franchising out its foreign policy to special interest groups.

The Soros-funded Orange Revolution in Ukraine took place at the same time Soros was trying to influence the outcome of the 2004 U.S. presidential election.

WMR has learned from knowledgeable source that Soros paid Republican attorneys to infiltrate the movement in Ohio that worked to expose GOP vote rigging in the state and the fraud that resulted in George W. Bush's re-election. It is likely that Soros is adopting the same tactics with the opposition in Georgia and Ukraine today.

Applebaum's column indicates a change in Soros's tactics. High-tech Twitter and Facebook revolutions appear to be his new game. That will only invite more government surveillance of such social networking media and increased neocon manipulation of information.

Chapter 8 - Soros's pro-junta coup in Honduras

[This article appeared in WMR on August 4, 2009]

Supporters of ousted Honduran President Manuel Zelaya who have returned to the United States from Honduras report that the country's military-backed junta is supported by throngs of wealthy elites in the streets who have adopted the color white in support of the junta and its acting president Roberto Micheletti.

The selection of the color white is perhaps fitting for a nation where the capitalist elite that supported the coup is practically 100 percent white and of European ancestry. The "white" nature of the coup leaders was best spelled out by the junta's first "Foreign Minister" Enrique Ortez Colindres, who said of President Barack Obama: "that little black boy who knows nothing about anything ... a little black man who doesn't know where Tegucigalpa is."[1]

1 "Officials: Honduras' new Chancellor, Enrique Ortez Colindres, must apologize for slur," Redding News Review, July 6, 2009.

The use of white flags in pro-junta demonstrations and the wearing of white shirts by junta supporters is reminiscent of the themed "color revolutions" fomented and financed by global troublemaker and crisis financial speculator George Soros. At the same time white flags and shirts appeared on the streets of Honduras, green flags and clothing were being worn by anti-government demonstrators in Iran. The involvement of the Soros-linked National Endowment for Democracy (NED) and U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID), which has worked with Soros's Open Society Institute (OSI) in organizing opposition movements and demonstrations in Ukraine, Georgia, Moldova, Kyrgyzstan, Lebanon, Myanmar, Tibet, Serbia, and Sinkiang province in China, in the street demonstrations in both Honduras and Iran is clear. Soros's Latin American Program, part of OSI, states that it promotes "democratic institutions" in Latin America, which is true if one believes that U.S.-supported oligarchies in Colombia and Panama and the Honduran junta are "democratic institutions."

Soros and NED funds have been intermingled in support of the Honduran junta under the ruse of "preserving the rule of law" in Honduras, which is code for supporting the right-wing junta. One of the cover projects is called Civic Participation and Democratic Planning. In Honduras, OSI is reported to use "local researchers" for its "projects." Similarly, such intermingled funds are used to destabilize Hugo Chavez's government in Venezuela under the guise of combating "anti-Semitism" in that country.

Soros and U.S.-backed themed revolutions:

Honduras (2009)	White Revolution
Iran (2009)	Green Revolution (unsuccessful)
Georgia (2003)	Rose Revolution
Ukraine (2004)	Orange Revolution

Kyrgyzstan (2005)	Tulip or Pink Revolution
Voldova (2009)	Twitter Revolution (partly successful)
Lebanon (2005)	Cedar Revolution
Belarus (2006)	Denim Revolution (unsuccessful)
Myanmar (2007)	Saffron Revolution (unsuccessful)
Tibet (2008)	Crimson Revolution (unsuccessful)
Mongolia (2005)	Yellow Revolution (partly successful)

Last November, Soros gathered a few Latin American leaders together in the Dominican Republic for a typical Soros contrivance called "The Emerging Global Financial Order," a regional economic summit that was, in reality, pushing for final adoption of the Dominican Republic-Central American Free Trade Agreement (DR-CAFTA).

In addition to Soros and Zelaya, others participating included two of Soros's capitalist right-wing pals, Resident Elias Antonio Saca of El Salvador (now replaced by progressive president Mauricio Funes) and Prime Minister Michele Pierre-Louis of Haiti, where the democratically-elected President Jean-Bertrand Aristide was, like Zelaya, was forced into exile after a U.S.-sponsored coup ousted him in 2004. The meeting was officially hosted by Dominican President Leonel Fernandez who maintains friendly relations with Latin American progressive leaders. Also present were the general secretary of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean (ECLAC), Alicia Barcena and the secretary general of the Organization of American States (OAS) Jose Miguel Insulza, a supporter of Zelaya.

After Zelaya embraced Chavez's Bolivarian Alternative for the Americas (ALBA), an anti-capitalist Latin American bloc, the heat from the right-wing, as well as faux progressives like Soros and his gang, was turned up on the Honduran president. That pressure culminated in the coup against him and Honduras's "White Revolution."

Chapter 9 - Soros strikes again - in Kyrgyzstan [This article appeared in WMR on April 26, 2010]

The new interim president of Kyrgyzstan, Roza Isakovna Otunbayeva, is an operative of George Soros's Open Society Institute, according to sources familiar with Kyrgyz politics. Otunbayeva became interim president after a popular uprising ousted Kyrgyzstan's nepotistic and corrupt president Kurmanbek Bakiyev. One of Otunbayeva's first acts was to reassure the United States that its lease of the Manas airbase, known as the Manas Transit Center," would be extended for at least one more year. A clear majority of the Kyrgyz opposition to Bakiyev remain opposed to the U.S. military presence at Manas.

Otunbayeva cultivated her links with Soros and U.S. intelligence while serving as Kyrgyzstan's first ambassador to the United States from 1992 to 1994.

She had been Kyrgyzstan's Deputy Prime Minister and Foreign Minister upon her nation's independence and she served under President Askar Akayev. Otunbayeva cultivated her links with Soros's London operations as Krgyzstan's ambassador to the United Kingdom from 1998 to 2001.

Otunbayeva was the deputy head of the UN Mission in Georgia from 2002 to 2004 but was, according to WMR's sources, an unofficial adviser to Mikheil Saakashvili who stormed Georgia's parliament on November 2003, ousting President Eduard

Shevardnadze, the former Soviet foreign minister. Otunbayeva was one of several unofficial advisers to Saakashvili's "Rose Revolution," one of a series of themed revolutions concocted by Soros and supported by neocons like Randy Scheunemann, a top adviser to Senator John McCain's 2008 presidential campaign, and political operative Daniel Kunin of the CIA-linked US Agency for International Development and the National Democratic Institute, a CIA-linked arm of the U.S. Democratic Party that, like the Republican Party's international arm, the International Republican Institute, receives funding from the National Endowment for Democracy.

In early 2005, fresh with knowledge of Soros's themed revolution propaganda and street demonstration techniques used in Tbilisi in 2003 and Kiev in 2004, Otunbayeva set about to organize demonstrations that ultimately led to the "Tulip Revolution" against Akayev in Bishkek. The Tulip Revolution was funded by CIA money laundered through the State Department and Soros's OSI contrivances.

The Tulip Revolution saw Bakiyev come to power. Otunbayeva became acting Foreign Minister but failed to win parliamentary approval to retain the position. She then went into opposition.

When it became apparent that Bakiyev and his son, Maxim Bakiyev, who was a habitue of Soros-linked seminars and forums and a corporate official of a string of entities, from the Latvian holding company Maval

In fact, Red Star and the Defense Energy Supply Corporation, which inked the contract through a Chuck Squires, a retired US Army officer, are front operations for the Logistics Civil Augmentation Program (LOGCAP) contract awarded by the U.S. Army to Kellogg, Brown & Root (KBR), a former subsidiary of Dick Cheney's old firm Halliburton. The LOGCAP III contract was a virtual license for KBR to engage in fraudulent contract activity from Iraq and Afghanistan to Bosnia and Kyrgyzstan and some 90 other countries.

In 2003, KBR beat back congressional critics over an audit report that KBR had overcharged the Defense Department for fuel deliveries. At the time, the United States was permitting similar payoffs for fuel deliveries to Manas to be placed in the pocket of Aidar Akayev, the son of Kyrgyzstan's then-president Akayev. That construct repeated itself with KBR bribes, laundered through LOGCAP III, to go to Bakayev's son Maxim.

In 2005, Bunnatine Greenhouse, a US Army Corps of Engineers chief contracting officer, was fired after she revealed that the $1.2 billion Restore Iraqi Oil contract was awarded to KBR in a sole source, non-competitive bid process. Cheney denied profiting from all the KBR contract fraud, however, it was clear that both Cheney and the Bush family would suffer financially if the Kyrgyz government forced the U.S. to leave Manas.

President Obama, eager to please the Bush family and Cheney, moved fast, along with Soros, to ensure that a longtime U.S. operative took control of the situation in Bishkek. Thus, Otunbayeva moved in to become acting president with the U.S. assured of a continued presence at the Manas base with the dodgy oil deals with KBR remaining in effect.

Chapter 10 - Cognitive infiltration of the Internet - Soros funds it

[This article appeared in WMR on February 1, 2011]

As if on cue and as America's past program of commandeering and steering popular rebellions and revolutions to bring about pro-American governments is failing on a grand scale, WMR has learned from reliable sources that there has been an increase in the disruption of blogs and comments sections on web sites in the United States, especially those that take on an anti-Obama and anti-globalist stance from the left side of the political spectrum.

Professional agents provocateurs and amateurs from the "netizen" community have busy posting comments on various web sites to distract and steer post threads away from subjects that are critical of the Obama administration. In addition, WMR has learned that international financier George Soros has stepped up his program to act as a "gate keeper" of the left by contributing more money and staff paid through his various non-profit contrivances to increase his political influence on the left side of the blogosphere.

Various wealthy tycoons on the right, including the Koch brothers, have carried out the same manipulative efforts on the right side of the blogosphere for some time but Soros's efforts, which seek to mirror the Israel Lobby's "Give Israel Your United Support" (GIYUS) and its Megaphone desktop computer article and commentary monitoring tool, are the current focus of White House political propaganda operatives, including White House Office of Information Regulatory Affairs chief Cass Sunstein, the mastermind of the program of cognitive infiltration" of Internet sites by federal government agents and operatives.

The paid operatives who disrupt web sites take a number of tacks. Options include the use of profanity, especially toward the original poster of an item. But more often, the infiltration takes the form of posting extraneous information to detour the commentary thread away from uncomfortable subjects. For example, if one is participating in a back-and-forth exchange dealing with U.S. Middle East policy, a comment on a great recipe for chili for a Super Bowl party may appear, followed by similar disruptive chili recipes, all from the same originator or group of originators who seek to divert and eventually kill the thread.

In bolder cases, Soros-paid operatives will simply ban individuals from certain sites that are amply funded by the multi-billionaire "disaster capitalist," thus censoring their future comments temporarily or permanently, there are a number of so-called "progressive" web sites that conduct such operations on a routine basis.

Currently, with the release of certain documents of dubious origin, including pre-selected State Department cables and papers from Israeli-Palestinian peace negotiations, the Internet is experiencing the first major salvo in a global information war, one that, like the so-called "war on terrorism," appears to be permanent. And as with any war, the truth is the first casualty.

With the Federal Communications Commission (FCC) working on new regulations that may corrupt traditional "net neutrality" on the web in favor of more corporate control over access and bandwidth, the word is that Soros's plans are to further expand his influence on left and center-left websites that deal with politics and social issues -- a plan that may forestall the need for an Internet "kill switch." The Egyptian situation has shown that there are ways around "kill switch" technology for the Internet and cell phone networks. Therefore, as the elites, who recently adjourned from their annual conclave in Davos, Switzerland, where they huddled together over the loss of "stability" [the term equates to the elites' control of the world] from Cairo to Athens and London to Reykjavik, information manipulators like George Soros and Bill Gates realize that only Sunstein's "cognitive infiltration" will ensure that Zbigniew Brzezinski's heralded "global awakening" will remain in a deep coma.

Chapter 11 - Soros's biggest themed revolution target: China

[This article appeared in WMR on July 20, 2011]

A carefully choreographed Wikileaks release of State Department cables detailing Cambodia's return to China of refugee Muslim Uighur separatists, coupled with a renewed outbreak of separatist violence in the Xinjiang-Uighur Autonomous Region (XUAR) and a conclave of Tibet's top religious and political leaders in Washington, DC, strongly indicates that George Soros's network of non-governmental organizations and CIA operatives have decided that their next target for a preplanned "themed revolution" is China.

Soros's Open Society Institute (OSI) has pumped millions of dollars to the "Mother of the Uighurs" Rebiya Kadeer's World Uighur Congress. Kadeer's husband, Sidik Rouzi, is the head of Radio Liberty's Uighur section at the Soros-influenced broadcaster's Munich studios of Radio Free Asia. Rouzi previously worked for Radio Free Asia, which is also a U.S. propaganda outlet that helped stoke Soros 'Saffron' rebellions in Tibet and Burma.

A December 22, 2009, cable from the U.S. embassy in Phnom Penh details how Cambodia, under pressure from China, returned Uighur refugees to China because they were considered "illegal aliens." The cable quotes an article in the Cambodia Daily dated December 19, 2009: "General Khieu Sopheak [Cambodian government spokesman] stated that the Uighurs are 'criminals escaping from China and involved with a terrorist organization in China. If they were really refugees, how did they know where the UNHCR office is in Phnom Penh? And when they arrived in Cambodia they had their people pick them up from the ferry. We don't care if China asks us or not. They are illegal immigrants so we have to apply the law. They are going back the way they came.'" The cable subject line is "SUBJECT: CAMBODIAN ABOUT FACE ON UIGHUR ASYLUM SEEKERS PORTRAYED IN THE MEDIA." The release of the cable by Wikileaks has resulted in a political rift among Cambodian political parties and has sought to create a schism in relations between Phnom Penh and Beijing. The Cambodia Daily is linked to the CIA and the Unification Church of Rev. Sun Myung Moon. The paper also has a sweetheart deal that permits it to carry free of charge articles from The New York Times and The Washington Post.

The cable follows with a December 21 report in the same newspaper: "General Khieu Sopheak noted that 20 of the 22 Uighurs who sought refuge in Cambodia were put on a plane to China at about 9pm on Saturday night. 'They were deported at 9 o'clock last night. They went back on a Chinese plane'. He also said the government decided to send the asylum seekers back to China after an investigation revealed that they were criminals connected to a terrorist group in China, which he declined to name. 'They were led to Cambodia by a leader of a terrorist group, but I do not want to mention the name. If they are civilians why didn't they report to the Cambodian government?' he asked."

As the cables were released, Uighurs attacked a police station in Xinjiang. Chinese security forces killed 18 of the attackers, who Kadeer's World Uighur Congress in Germany claimed were "peaceful protesters."

Kadeer is also known as the "Dragon Fighter," which is also the title of her book, the introduction for which was written by the Dalai Lama of Tibet. Not coincidentally, Soros's daughter, Andrea Soros Colombel, is the founder and president of the Trace Foundation and the co-founder, along with her husband, of the Tsadra Foundation. Both organizations directly support the Tibetan government-in-exile and their fingerprints were on the 2008 bloody rebellion in Tibet. Soros's OSI Burma Project/Southeast Asia also had its fingerprints on the 2007 Buddhist monks' rebellion in Burma, the so-called Saffron Revolution, the same theme applied to the Tibetan uprising in 2008.

As the Wikileaks cable on the Uighurs in Cambodia was released, Tibet's top officials were in Washington. President Obama infuriated China by meeting the Dalai Lama. In addition, the 17th Karmapa Lama, the leader of the Kagyu karma sect who some Buddhists consider to be the third holiest leader of Tibetan Buddhism, was given a hastily-arranged travel permit by India to travel to Washington. Also in Washington was the new prime minister of the Tibetan government-in-exile, Lobsang Sangay. The Karmapa, Ogyen Trinley Dorje, is a potential heir to the Dalai Lama. The Dalai Lama, Karmapa, and the prime minister all traveled to Washington on Indian travel documents just prior to

Secretary of State Hillary Clinton's arrival in New Delhi. Other exiled Tibetan leaders were also in Washington for what was billed as a major Buddhist festival.

China reacted to the meeting of Tibetan leaders by calling in the American charge d'affaires in Beijing a lodging a strong diplomatic protest. But even stronger reaction came from China's Vice President and likely next president, Xi Jinping, who, in a July 19 speech in Lhasa, the Tibetan capital, vowed to crush any attempt to "undermine stability" in Tibet. The speech, which came a day after Obama's meeting with the Dalai Lama, was clearly aimed at the Obama administration, Hillary Clinton in New Delhi, and the Obama administration's allies in the global Soros network of political operatives and "themed revolution" provocateurs. Earlier this year, there was an outbreak of protests among Tibetans in Sichuan, a province of what was once Greater Tibet. Soros's NGO agents also operate openly in Bhutan, which also adheres to Tibetan Buddhism.

While Obama has tried to placate China by limiting U.S. weapons sales to Taiwan, his administration has opted to create unrest in China's restive regions of Tibet and Xinjiang. However, Obama's friend Soros has also been eyeing other regions of China. In March, violence broke out among ethnic Mongolians in the Inner Mongolia Autonomous Region. Soros is linked to groups advocating separation from China of what the separatists call "Southern Mongolia." It is believed the Southern Mongolians receive political and other support from kinsmen in the Republic of Mongolia, where Soros and the CIA have major operations. A center for Southern Mongolian separatism is maintained in New York, where Soros's influence predominates within various human rights groups based in the city.

Soros is also an investor in Hainan Airlines, which serves China's Hainan island, the scene of anti-government unrest in 2009. Hainan is also where China's fleet of nuclear ballistic submarines is based. Soros's daughter's Trace Foundation has also been active in Yunnan province, which has seen disturbances among Kachin refugees trying to enter China from northern Burma and which has seen a massive influx of cheap heroin from U.S.-controlled Afghanistan in what may be a prelude to a revived "Opium War" by the United States. Earlier this year, George Soros moved into Yunnan by announcing the start-up of Yunnan Airlines.

Criticism of the Soros family's CIA-linked activities in undermining the Chinese government have been met from the usual suspected quarters with allegations of "conspiracy theories" and the old reliable canard, anti-Semitism. Like poisonous centipedes, the two allegations usually travel in pairs.

Chapter 11 - Soros and Sunstein: a dangerous duo

[This article appeared in WMR on July 20, 2011]

WMR has recently learned that international financier George Soros, a major backer of President Obama and other Democrats, does not take criticism lightly. In fact, Soros has been engaging in a tactic usually favored by right-wing corporations: shutting down critics with a legal instrument known as a "strategic lawsuit against public participation (SLAPP)." SLAPP suits are intended to silence critics by forcing them into expensive litigation stemming from charges of libel. Ultimately, the charged parties are forced to retract unfavorable articles of be faced into bankruptcy as the result of costly judgments.

The SLAPP tactics of Soros have been aimed at websites that criticize globalization and Soros's role in it.

Obama's chief of the Office of Information and Regulatory Affairs, Cass Sunstein, wrote in his 2003 book, Why Societies Need Dissent, about how dissent benefits society. However, Sunstein has flip-flopped on his previous stances and now favors proactive disruption of web sites critical of the government, measures he has labeled "cognitive infiltration."

The information disruptors of the so-called "progressive left," including Soros, appear to be taking Sunstein's censorship tactics to a new level by engaging in SLAPPs.

WMR knows of one case where Soros is suing a bona fide progressive organization for $500,000 for an article suggesting that one of Soros's foundations has promoted violence by supporting certain "themed" revolutions. WMR is on record in many past articles citing the same violent elements embedded in Soros's support for themed revolutions, many of which dovetailed and were coordinated with CIA, National Endowment for Democracy (NED), and U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) political disruption operations. The violence associated with Soros's themed revolution activities were particularly noticeable in Iran, Tibet, Burma, Xinjiang Uighur Autonomous Region of China, and more recently, in Egypt, Libya, and Syria.

Sunstein's wife, White House National Security Council adviser Samantha Power[1], was one of the driving forces behind Obama's decision to engage militarily in Libya at the outset of the rebellion, part of which was supported by Soros's vast array of non-governmental organizations. Many of these NGOs have adopted the "Responsibility to Protect" (R2P) doctrine of Powers and the doctrine was behind the activities of various factions in the "Lotus Revolution" in Egypt and the "Jasmine Revolution" in Tunisia. The Libyan rebels' use of Facebook, a common tactic for the Soros gang, had some dubbing the Libyan revolution the "Facebook Revolution" at its outset.

1 Power was nominated by President Obama to be U.S. ambassador to the United Nations on June 5, 2013. Neoconservatives such as Senators John McCain and Lindsey Graham and former Senator Joe Lieberman rallied to support her nomination.

Soros and his lawyers have not shown any signs of backing down in its SLAPP tactics against critics of his themed revolutions. However, with more publicity, George Soros's Internet disruption tactics may go the way of Righthaven, a company that specialized in using copyright infringement lawsuits against websites and bloggers availing themselves of Fair Use provisions in order to force them into costly litigation and ultimate bankruptcy.

Righthaven, facing legal blow-back from its activities, recently filed for bankruptcy. Hopefully, Mr. Soros will also face such blow-back with his insidious scheming and relationship to Obama's and Sunstein's draconian information policies being exposed for all the world to see.

Chapter 12 - Soros fails in China

[This article appeared in WMR on February 9, 2012]

As George Soros and CIA-supported non-governmental organization (NGO) provocateurs and street demonstration planners have been caught trying to destabilize Russia and Egypt, another less public plot to bring about political change on U.S. terms has been uncovered in China.

Chongqing's vice mayor and police chief Wang Lijun was caught trying to obtain political asylum in the U.S. consulate general in Chengdu, which is not far from Chonqing. Wang, an ethnic Mongol, is a close confidante of Chongqing Communist Party secretary Bo Xilai. Bo's father was a Communist veteran of Mao Zedong's communist guerrilla campaign that ultimately saw the establishment of the People's Republic of China in 1949.

Bo was hoping to be elevated to the Chinese Communist Party's nine-member Politburo Standing Committee after seven members, including President Hu Jintao, step down later this year. Bo and Wang were the impetus behind Chongqing's western-style real estate boom and development schemes. However, it now appears that Bo and Wang were much more: they were the vanguard of U.S.-controlled Communist Party leaders from outside of Beijing who were to take the places of some of the seven CCP Politburo members.

Soros and Rothschild interests in New York helped fund the Chongqing property bubble in 2005. In late 2010, Soros Fund Management established an office in Hong Kong after an initial multi-billion investment in the Hong Kong Stock Exchange-listed Minsheng Bank Ltd. and Longfor Property Group.

Minsheng was headed by Eddie Wang, former head of the China branch of HSBC who reputedly maintained close links with Britain's MI-6. Wang was forced out of Minsheng last year after the bank experienced unexplained disappearances of its funds. In 2011, Longfor was cited by Moody's for a lack of transparency and mis-reported funds disappearances. Wu Yajun ("Madam Wu"), who is reportedly the world's wealthiest woman and is a member of the National People's Congress, was forced out as the general director of Longfor.

Soros and National Endowment for Democracy-controlled NGOs are well-entrenched in the Chinese provinces, according to WMR's Asian intelligence sources. The operations are overseen by the CIA station in Hong Kong. Soros NGOs are also active among Wang's fellow Chinese-Mongols, especially in Inner Mongolia, the scene of recent social unrest.

Soros was trying to install Bo into the Politburo as China's Mikhail Gorbachev. Bo would have been expected to dismantle the state apparatus of the People's Republic of China and sell off Chinese state enterprises to Western investors like Soros and the Rothschilds. Essentially, the PRC would have gone the way of the USSR and China would have fallen to the whims of global vampire capitalism.

However, Wang Lijun's corruption in the Chongqing real estate market has exposed Bo and his Soros-linked plans. Wang's attempt to seek asylum in the U.S. consulate general in Chengdu has exposed the Soros/CIA plans and Bo's candidacy for the Politburo has been nixed. Soros's business operations in China are already under examination by state prosecutors and the commercial police and the Hungarian-American hedge fund tycoon stands to lose billions he has invested in China.

After Soros's attempted "White Revolution" in Russia and "Lotus Revolution" in Egypt were been exposed as CIA operations run through a network of Soros and non-Soros NGOs, and Soros's "Yellow Revolution" government in Maldives was ousted in a counter-coup by the vice president and police, the developments in China have shown that America's last gasp use of "soft power" to influence world events has turned out to be, quoting from Mao, a "paper tiger."

The attempted escape by Wang into the U.S. mission in Chengdu will also bring more Chinese security attention to bear on CIA and Soros operations in other parts of China, including Tibet, Xinjiang, Inner Mongolia, Yunnan, Hainan, Hong Kong, and Macao.

Chinese Vice President Xi Jinping, expected to become Chinese President later this year, will meet President Obama next week in Washington. We can expect Xi to sternly tell Obama that China will not tolerate U.S. interference in the internal political affairs of China and the Chinese Communist Party.

The following appeared in WMR on October 2, 2012 and was datelined Beijing:

Hedge fund mogul and CIA-influenced international troublemaker George Soros was a behind-the-scenes promoter of the 1989 Tiananmen Square uprising that shook China's political leadership and was designed to bring about the fall of Communism in the country. According to well-placed sources here in Beijing, then-General Secretary of the Chinese Communist Party Zhao Ziyang was a close confidante of Soros. Zhao, who was seen as supporting the goals of the demonstrators in Tiananmen Square, was later purged by the Communist Party.

Soros, at the time of his involvement with the Tiananmen Square uprising, was actively shorting Asian currencies, including the Malaysian ringgit and Thai baht, in order to destroy the economies of the so-called rising "Asian tiger" nations in Southeast and East Asia. Malaysian Prime Minister Mahathir Mohamed later stated that Soros was part of a conspiracy by Jewish financiers to depress the ringgit in a plot against a prosperous Muslim nation.

Ever since Soros's involvement in fomenting unrest in China. Beijing has kent a wary eye on the activities of his non-governmental organizations in China. Soros is involved in backing ethnic groups ranging from the Tibetans and the Dalai Lama to the Muslim Uighurs in Xinjiang and Inner Mongolians who live in an autonomous region south of the Sino-Mongolian border.

Postscript: American firms that have moved U.S. jobs to China, such as Mitt Romney's Bain Capital, are having second thoughts. U.S. firms oppose paying into Chinese employees' retirement accounts that permit Chinese women to retire at the age of 50 and men at the age of 60. Working through the U.S.-China Chamber of Commerce, based in Chicago, and the American Chamber of Commerce in Beijing, American firms are trying to raise the retirement age of women to 52 and men to 62 but their efforts will not stop there. U.S. firms want Chinese employees to pay more of a percentage of their salaries to their retirement packages. The U.S. firms are trying to change current Chinese law that stipulates the retirement age and employees' contributions. Resistance by Chinese employees to the raising of the retirement age has many U.S. firms, including those in which Soros and Bain have healthy investments, looking at re-exporting jobs from China to other countries, including India, Indonesia, and Myanmar.

Chapter 13 - The Sorosization of the United Nations

[This article appeared in WMR on May 21, 2012]

Informed sources have provided WMR with information and documentation that shows that major multinational corporations and the financial and nongovernmental organization network of George Soros have taken effective control of a number of United Nations functions within the UN Secretariat and within the organization's specialized agencies.

The United Nations, which once prided itself on transparency, has now become a bureaucratic behemoth where decisions are made in closed door meetings attended by diplomats, mostly from English-speaking Western countries; corporate representatives; NGO officials tied to Soros and other entities like the Ford and Rockefeller Foundations; and current and former CIA officers, some of whom act under U.S. State Department cover. It is a fact of life that today a number of UN agencies and elements are funded by private money.

Although South Korean Ban Ki-moon is the Secretary General of the UN, his most important deputies represent the interests of NATO and its allies. The Undersecretary General for Political Affairs is B. Lynn Pascoe, a former U.S. ambassador to Indonesia and Malaysia and is thought by many UN staffers to have links to the CIA. The Undersecretary General for Safety and Security is Gregory Starr, a former Director of the U.S. State Department's Diplomatic Security Service who is also thought to have close links to the CIA. The Assistant Secretary-General for Strategic Planning and Policy Coordination is Robert Orr, the former Director of Global and Multilateral Affairs at the U.S. National Security Council on which the CIA is represented. The Executive Director of the UN Children's Fund (UNICEF) is Anthony Lake, a former U.S. National Security Adviser.

The Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations is Herve Ladsous of France who has served as French ambassador to Indonesia and China and who is a pro-NATO Atlanticist.

WMR has been told that perhaps nowhere is the Soros and CIA influence felt more than in the UN Development Program (UNDP), which is headed by Helen Clark, a former Prime Minister of New Zealand. However, we have been told by informed sources that Soros's operatives are heavily present in every UN agency except for Peacekeeping Operations but that it, too, is an ultimate target for the multi-billionaire Hungarian Jew who once cooperated with the Nazi occupation forces in wartime Hungary.

Soros is very close to former UN Deputy Secretary General and UNDP administrator Mark Malloch Brown of Great Britain. While UN Deputy Secretary General, Malloch Brown, now Lord Malloch Brown, resided rent-free at Soros's estate in Westchester County, New York. The UN's Global Compact is a brainchild of former Secretary General Kofi Annan, who is now charged with easing the government of Bashar ai Assad from power in Syria. Pushing the Global Compact, Malloch Brown, while UNDP administrator, invited multinational corporations to "use their purchasing power to help develop small and medium-sized enterprises across the developing world." The Global Compact essentially gives multinational corporations a say in how projects in developing countries are carried out.

The UN has been holding a number of closed-door meetings and seminars at which the partition of UN member states has been discussed. Most of the meetings have been held under the direction of the UN Interagency Framework for Coordination on Preventive Action (the Framework Team or FT). The FT brings together representatives from a number of alphabet soup UN offices and specialized agencies, including:

DESA - Department of Economic and Social Affairs

DPA - Department of Political Affairs

DPKO - Department of Peacekeeping Operations

DOCO - UN Development Operations Coordination Office

EOSG - Executive Office of the Secretary General

FAO - Food and Agricultural Organization

ILO - International Labor Organization

OCHA - Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs

OHCHR - UN High Commissioner for Human Rights OSAPG - Office of the Special Adviser for the Prevention of Genocide

PBSO - Peacebuilding Support Office

UNDP - UN Development Program

UNESCO - UN Educational, Scientific, and Cultural Organization

UNHABITAT - UN Center for Human Settlements

UNICEF-UN Children's Fund

UN WOMEN - UN Entity for Gender Equality and Women's Empowerment

UNHCR - UN High Commissioner for Refugees

UNEP - UN Environment Program

UNDEF - UN Democracy Fund

UNFPA - UN Population Fund

WFP - World Food Program

WHO - World Health Organization

WB - World Bank

IMF - International Monetary Fund DPI - Department of Public Information OSAA (Office of the Special Advisor on Africa)

DDA - Department for Disarmament Affairs UNODC- UN office on Drugs and Crime

WMR has been informed that much of the Work of the FT is carried out under the direction of an American, Gay Rosenblum-Kumar. She heads up the Conflict Management Capacity-Building Project and the Peacebuilding Portal. While the names of these groups appear benign, they are at the center of a global plan by Soros, his NGOs, the CIA, and the global bankers to redraw the map of the world to suit the needs of multinational corporations and the United States and NATO. And the Zionist cause is also at play with the FT. WMR has been told that many FT meetings include speeches by Elie Wiesel, the so-called "Holocaust" survivor who has encouraged international R2P (responsibility to protect) intervention in Libya, Sudan, Syria, and other countries. Another well-known Zionist who is involved in the work of the FT is a professional trainer in "Conversation" and "Non-violent Communications" (NVC). He has overseen "outsourcing transition," i.e., informing employees of their lay-offs and "benefits" packages at Merrill Lynch, Charles Schwab, and Bank of New York Mellon. From advising companies on how to inform employees that their jobs are finished, the individual in question now advises the UN on how to tell entire countries that they are "finished."

The FT also advances the work of President Obama's "information czar" Cass Sunstein; his wife Samantha Power of the U.S. National Security Council; and Gene Sharp, the Albert Einstein Institution's developer of the "themed revolution" concept.

The FT has also trained certain activists around the world, particularly in developing and other countries with pro-western governments, to use "the system" to effect change and has advised them "not to protest against their government." WMR has been told that the entire FT operation at the UN is bankrolled with Soros money.

Perhaps the most alarming aspect of the FT's work is aimed at dividing existing nation-states into smaller entities. At a recent FT meeting titled "Nepal in Transition," it was clear what strategy is being employed to carry out such divisions. The division of Nepal, with the ultimate goal being the marginalization of the powerful Communist Party of Nepal (Maoist), foresees "identity federalism," the first step before actual secession of federal components.

A number of Nepalese political parties and movements recently signed an agreement that would create an "identity-based" federal republic in Nepal. The UN's chief promoter of the strategy is Ian Martin, the Special Representative of the Secretary-General who has headed UN missions in Nepal and, most recently, in Libya. Under the UN plan, Nepal would be transformed into a polyglot federal republic based on indigenous groups, nationalities, castes such as the Dalit, and Muslims. Martin has been involved in creating "federal" structures in Bosnia-Herzegovina and Libya. The latter has seen the eastern province of Cyrenaica, with its capital in Benghazi, proclaim its autonomy from Tripoli.

The Soros/CIA plan: federalize Nepal and then peel away its federal units as independent mini-vassal states of the West Sri Lanka, Myanmar, Indonesia, Russia, and China will follow in the same manner.

Some UN participants in the talks on Nepal spoke of the need to "eliminate" the Maoists in Nepal. Robert 0. Blake, the Assistant Secretary of State for South Asian Affairs, and who has been linked to the CIA, participated in the Nepal conference. Blake reportedly helped engineer the February 2012 coup in Maldives that drove President Mohamed Nasheed from power. The coup, which ushered into power a pro-Islamic government said to be backed by former President Maumoon Abdul Gayoom, could set the stage for a Maldives comprised of autonomous atolls, with the United States able to acquire military bases in certain southern atolls as part of its encirclement of China policy.

Sri Lanka is also a target for the identity federalism engineers. WMR has been informed that during the 2008 presidential campaign both Hillary Clinton and Barack Obama received large campaign donations from front groups for the Tamil Tigers, a guerrilla group that favors an independent Tamil state in Sri Lanka and which is designated as a terrorist organization by the U.S. State Department. To thank the Tigers for their support, the Obama administration, Soros, and the International Peace Institute of Norway (which has been called by our sources a front for NATO, Soros, and the CIA and which supported the Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam [LTTE] during their long civil war against the Sri Lankan government) have been pushing for a federal system in Sri Lanka that would create a Sinhalese, Tamil, and Muslim federation, with secession following.

FT meetings have also discussed the fragmentation of India with some Indian officials agreeing with State Department/CIA participants that such an idea is feasible. India would be separated first according to linguistic lines and then according to religious and ethnic factors.

Wither India, according to UN New World Order map makers.

A number of Norwegians are quietly pushing the identity federalism solution, some of whom, particularly Professor Johan Galtung, are Soros favorites. Galtung, called the "father of peacekeeping," is a favored guest on Amy Goodman's "Democracy Now" program. Goodman's operations are partially funded by Soros. WMR has been told that Norwegians involved in UN activities are far too trusted, not neutral, and always carrying the water for NATO and the United States.

To augment its identity federalism initiatives, Soros NGOs are also involved with creating a number of "partition studies" programs at major universities with international relations programs.

Myanmar is also a target for the identity federalists and partition specialists. The UN and Soros goal is to split Myanmar into various ethnic-based nations. Some of these nations would then provide the United States with military bases from which it can engage in intelligence, insurgency, and other operations in southern China. Informed sources have told WMR that the human rights issue in Myanmar and China has been used by Soros as a tool to gain influence in both nations.

Part of the reason President Obama dispatched U.S. troops to Uganda and the Central African Republic is to facilitate the federalization and then breakup of the neighboring Democratic Republic of Congo. Officially, the U.S. troops are in the countries to help local forces capture Lord's Resistance Army warlord Joseph Kony. However, the military mission was crafted by the NSC's Power in concert with the Global Center for the Responsibility to Protect, another Soros-funded operation. The actual goal is to Balkanize the Congo into smaller states that will be ripe for exploitation by Western and Israeli mining companies, with an independent Katanga being the biggest prize. Natural resource-rich North and South Kivu, with their large Tutsi population, could be absorbed by the minority Tutsi regime that governs Rwanda.

The ultimate goal of the EU/US/Japan/Australia/Canada/New Zealand/Soros alliance is the division of Russia, Indonesia, and China into smaller nations.

Chapter 14 - Soros's color revolution support network

[This article appeared in WMR on June 26, 2012]

A source who has worked on the inside of George Soros-sponsored color-themed revolutions in Iran, Ukraine, and Russia has told WMR that the multibillionaire hedge fund tycoon is now backing nongovernmental groups that hide their intentions behind micro-loan financing schemes, like the one President Obama's mother advocated for in Asia, and human spiritual development programs.

However, our source reports the actual goals of these reconstituted "New Age" groups include bringing about a new world order through nation-state destruction and the placement of leaders subservient to Western financial interests in power, especially in Africa, the Middle East, Asia, eastern Europe, and Latin America.

Our source reports that two groups, in particular, are connected to the Soros, and, by default, the Rothschild family's plans to capture control of the world's gold and other precious metal supplies. Another silent partner in the Soros NGO movement is, according to our source, Saudi tycoon Prince Al Waleed bin Talal, who is said to be the financial liaison between Soros and the Rothschilds and the Muslim Brotherhood, which, through partially Soros-directed themed revolutions in Tunisia and Egypt, ushered Muslim Brotherhood-dominated governments into power. The same scenario is now being played out in Syria. Bin Talal's agenda also includes pushing Wahhabi Salafist Muslim radicals into the top hierarchy of "Arab Spring" movements.

The first group is Sanghata Global, a group that pushes small business capitalism along with spiritual development among the poor. The group started in the slums of Mumbai in 2009 as a sort of real-life "Slum Dog Millionaire" to entice poor students from Mumbai's slums into the world of capitalism. A "Slum University" was created in Mumbai and Sanghata soon linked up with the Monterey Institute of International Studies. In fact, our source reports that Sanghata is ultimately supported by even more influential organizations than the Monterey Institute: the International Crisis Group, the Council on Foreign Relations, and, more interestingly, the Panetta Public Policy Institute in Monterey, California, founded by current Defense Secretary and past CIA director Leon Panetta.

Sanghata has set up a corps of "Frontier Market Scouts," a sort of Boy and Girl Scouts organization that sponsors students at America's top universities, including Harvard and Yale, to teach micro-financing capitalism in countries that also happen to be on Soros's radar screen: Brazil, China, Ecuador, Egypt, India, Kenya, Lebanon, Mexico, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Peru, Philippines, South Africa, Tanzania, Turkey, and Vietnam. Sanghata was co-founded by Sabiha Malik and Harper's journalist/Columbia Law School professor emeritus/founder of American University of Central Asia/and color revolution promoter Scott Horton. Sanghata also sponsors the New Age-sounding Singularity University, an academic center that is drawing the sons of daughters of the wealthy to its student body ranks.

WMR has been told that the program is actually targeting countries rich in gold, other precious metals, as well as gems and oil. As is Soros's modus operandi, the goals appear, in the surface, to be humanitarian, however, under the surface, where the Rothschilds have their agenda, the Soros operation is about controlling the world's gold and other strategic minerals.

On September 28, 2011, WMR reported the following: "There is a coordinated effort by the U.S. Department of Defense, State Department, and CIA, spurred on by Goldman Sachs elements in the Obama administration, to destabilize certain major gold-producing nations in order to bring them firmly into the U.S. orbit. With gold becoming the new strategic commodity, overtaking oil, Indonesia, which ranks seventh in gold production after China, the United States, Australia, South Africa, Russia, and Peru, and the world's most populous Muslim nation, has become the latest target for American destabilization, according to intelligence sources in Asia."

The major partner of Sanghata is the Lifeboat Foundation, which states its mission is to nonprofit nongovernmental organization dedicated to encouraging scientific advancements while helping humanity survive existential risks and possible misuse of increasingly powerful technologies, including genetic engineering, nanotechnology, and robotics/AI, as we move towards the Singularity. Sanghata also partly founded an investment arm, Village Capital. The following is how Village Capital describes the Frontier Market Scouts: "The Frontier Market Scouts Program selects and trains aspiring professionals who desire a career in social venture and impact investing. Jointly developed and managed by the Monterey Institute, Sanghata Global, and Village Capital, the Frontier Market Scouts (FMS) program turns compassionate and capable young professionals into talent scouts and investment managers serving local entrepreneurs and social-minded investors in low-income and weak-capital regions of the world."

Lifeboat has groups to deal with issues that seem to be from the pages of a science fiction novel: it wants to create a nano-shield around the Earth to protect it against self-replicating nano-robots. There are groups that deal with creating an Earth-orbital asteroid shield, search for extraterrestrial intelligence, a shield against artificial general intelligences (yes, they are referring to malevolent "Terminators"), biological warfare shields, underground bunkers, and space habitats.

As far as U.S. presidential politics are concerned, the international activities of Soros are not tied to any U.S. political party. In fact, our source reports that Soros is perfectly content with Mitt Romney because Bain Capital's activities mirror and overlap with many of Soros's Quantum Fund investment schemes, with Israel being a major base of operations for both.

Chapter 15 - Soros themed revolution comes to India

[This article appeared in WMR on January 9, 2013]

On any given day, the Indian news media is rife with disgusting reports of "honor killings" committed by Hindus and Muslims by males against female relatives and the rape of women that cross all socio-economic boundaries. However, when an individual like George Soros, with his massive media operations, can employ Gene Sharp's protest and revolt models developed for the CIA, any isolated incident can be manufactured into a worldwide crisis with instant consequences for the streets of any targeted country. In Tunisia, it was the self-immolation suicide of Mohamed Bouazizi that triggered the so-called "Jasmine Revolution." In Egypt, it was the Lotus Revolution coupled with police brutality cases that triggered the Lotus Revolution.

In Indonesia, it was a five-year jail sentence meted out to a 15-year old boy who was convicted of stealing a police officer's sandals that triggered the so-called "Sandal Revolution." That Soros/Sharp attempt to overthrow Indonesia's government failed as have similar attempts in Malaysia to foment insurrections against the Kuala Lumpur government.

In India, the unfortunate and all-too-common gang rape and subsequent death from her injuries of a young woman, in this case, a 23-year old physiotherapy student, triggered off mass demonstrations against the Indian government. Some in the Soros NGO world began referring to the protests as India's "Feminist Spring" and the rape-murder victim as India's Bouazizi.

After the "Arab Spring/' Soros and his media manipulators have been able to append the word "Spring" after any if their themed revolutions, much in the way that "gate," as in Watergate, has been appended to other words to describe the scandal du jour.

Soros has mastered the "perception management" game with billions of dollars at his disposal to effect the manipulation of the world's media, especially social media, to trigger street demonstrations with the goal of creating political instability. Of course, protests in India, Indonesia, Malaysia, China, and other countries permit Soros -- the guru of cashing in on crises, particularly those that devalue a nation's currency -- to make even more money, some of which is pumped back into creating additional crises. Naomi Klein has referred to this as "disaster capitalism," i.e. never letting as good disaster go to waste as far as capitalizing on human misery.

Behind the scenes sits the perfect globalist leader for India, Sonia Gandhi, the widow of the late Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi. Born Edvige Antonia Albina Maino, the daughter of an Italian building mason, and raised in a traditional Roman Catholic family, Gandhi is the president of the ruling Indian Congress Party.

The Soros-funded political operation in India is the "anti-corruption" Swaraj Sanvad movement of "clean government" campaigner Anna Hazare, who is often compared by the controlled Indian press to Mohandas K. Gandhi (no relation to Sonia Gandhi). Just as the Soros manipulators behind ousted Chinese Communist Party boss Bo Xilai tried to invoke the name and political spirit of Mao

Zedong, the Soros operation in India is attempting to use the Mahatma Gandhi brand to further its cause. And that cause has nothing to do with cleaning up corruption but in bringing into power Sonia Gandhi as another pro-globalization female Soros "I am woman hear me roar" capitalist stooge, much like Ellen Sirleaf Johnson in Liberia, Joyce Banda in Malawi, Laura Chinchilla in Costa Rica, Julia Gillard in Australia, Angela Merkel in Germany, and Park Geun-hye in South Korea.

"Clean government" claims have always been a clever ruse to obtain political power. In Japan, the "Komeito" or "Clean Government" party and its latest manifestation, New Komeito, is a Buddhist fascist party intent on restoring the power of Imperial Japan, There should be little surprise that New Komeito is a supporter of the right-wing government of revanchist Prime Minister Shinzo Abe.

In the end, Hillary and Bill Clinton are heavily invested in India's nuclear power (and nuclear weapons) industry. Bill Clinton hasn't been lobbying on behalf of Kazakhstan President Nursultan Nazarbayev's uranium mining industry because Bill enjoys the winters in Astana. While President Obama has tightened sanctions on Iran because of its peaceful nuclear program, India and the Clintons march on to providing India with a nuclear weapons par over China. Such machinations are what make the Democratic Party's "Third Way" into a present-day "Third Reich."

Soros's plans for India include the eventual Balkanization of the sub-continent. The commencement of the plan to exfiltrate thousands of Asiatic ersatz "B'nai Menashe" Jews from Manipur and Mizoram in northeast India is a prelude to the spreading of inter-ethnic conflict from Myanmar's Kachin and Rohinya regions to northeast India. Many of these faux Jews will eventually return to northeast India with Israeli diplomatic immunity to foment a series of false flag attacks staged to speed up the disintegration of the sub-continent.

In the world of Soros and Sharp, any event can and will be used to create a crisis and lay the ground for a popular revolt: a grandmother being run over by a bus in Caracas, a teen suicide in Kuala Lumpur, a hate crime murder of a homosexual in Kenya are all potential fertile grounds for triggering widespread revolts. Local news stories are now global events with a controlled news media ready, able, and willing to exploit such events for maximum political and financial gain. Welcome to Soros World.

Chapter 15 - Soros's counter-culture revolution

[This article appeared in WMR on January 14, 2013]

International vulture capitalist George Soros may be living up to his reputation as someone who likes to pick clean the bones of his human victims.

It has turned out that one of members of the Soros network in eastern Europe, who has attacked progressive commentator Naomi Wolf, also hyped a product called "Hufu," a tofu-like meat substitute that was advertised as having the consistency of human flesh. There was nothing illegal about the product since it is entirely based on soy beans and has no human-derived ingredients, however, the mere thought that members of Soros's brigades would even conjure up such a product, let alone market it, calls into question the ultimate goals of Soros and his evil-imbued plans for global influence.

As any readers of the "other Naomi" -- Naomi Klein --are well aware, Soros and his gang of banking and currency speculation profiteers have long capitalized on bringing about man-made disasters and capitalizing on natural ones. They cover their secretive activities by championing human rights and freedom of expression. But no one should be fooled by these "good works" and publicity stunts. Enough Soros money is spread through the "progressive community" to buy him an insurance policy against criticism of his manipulative activities, 84 which normally occur in far-flung target of opportunity nations.

Mark Nuckols, who teaches at Moscow State University Business School and the Russian Academy of National Economy, both perfect nesting grounds for Soros-backed provocateurs, recently penned an article attacking progressive commentator Naomi Wolf. Nuckols's article, which was more like a screed, appeared in the neo-conservative magazine The Atlantic, the same magazine that publishes the tiresome propaganda of Jeffrey Goldberg. Nuckols's article, titled "No, Naomi Wolf, America Is Not Becoming a Fascist State," flayed Wolf for her longstanding belief that America is trending toward a fascist police state.[1]

Mark Nuckols, "No, Naomi Wolf, America Is Not Becoming a Fascist State," The Atlantic, January 9, 2013.

Nuckols responded to Wolf's recent article in The Guardian that warned that the U.S. government and bankers are conspiring to bring about the "totally integrated corporate-state repression of dissent." Nuckols claims Wolf's research is based on "misstatements and errors." There are daily reports of the systematic violations of the constitutional rights of American citizens across the country, reports that Wolf relied upon in her analysis.

Not only does Nuckols pan Wolf's books, including her most recent, Vagina: A New Biography, but he defends the Transportation Security Administration's policy of forcing new mothers to drink their own breast milk. In her book, The End of America, Wolf discussed the incident of a TSA screener forcing a mother to drink bottled breast milk at JFK International Airport.

Recently, the Russian State Duma and President Vladimir Putin enacted legislation that bans passthrough organizations in Russia from receiving funding from the U.S. National Endowment for Democracy (NED). These operations are supported by another U.S. professor who routinely uses Moscow as a base for Soros propagandizing, Michael McFaul, the U.S. ambassador to Russia.

Nuckols also rejects Wolf's comparison of the USA PATRIOT Act to Adolf Hitler's Enabling Act that ripped apart Germany's Weimar Constitution. At the end of his anti-Wolf meme, Nuckols lands the final punch:

"In her various books, articles, and public speeches, Wolf has demonstrated recurring disregard for the historical record and consistently mutilated the truth with selective and ultimately deceptive use of her sources. All of this might have little real-world import when she writes about her orgasms or her weight problems. But when she distorts facts to advance her political agenda, she dishonors the victims of history and poisons present-day public discourse about issues of vital importance to a free society."

In the Soros world, for which Nuckols has prostituted himself, only Soros's "chicks" can get away with talking about orgasms and their vaginas while baring their breasts for international television. The Pussy Riot gals and their FEMEN and Voina allies have committed all sorts of "made-for-TV acts," following the "manufactured protest" script of CIA coup d'etat guru Gene Sharp to the tee. FEMEN protesters recently bared their breasts in Vatican City during the Angelus prayer offered by Pope Benedict XVI at his window in the papal residence. Soros's gals have also inserted chickens into their vaginas in Russian supermarkets, disrupted church ceremonies in the holiest Russian Orthodox Church -- Christ the Savior in the Kremlin, chain sawed Christian crosses, including a large crucifix in a Kiev park, and conducted public orgies. The campaign mirrors anti-Russian government campaigns by Soros's media whores who routinely attack President Vladimir Putin, Russian Orthodox Patriarch Kirill. Soros media have also targeted the interim Bulgarian Orthodox Patriarch of Sofia, also named Kirill, for being an informant for the Communist-era state intelligence service. Such "hit-and-run" media attacks, which also follow the Sharp script, are hallmarks of Soros's media operations in eastern and central Europe. Naomi Wolf was the latest to feel the "sharp" jabs of Soros's media manipulators and propagandists.

After the hit piece on her was published, Wolf attempted to contact John Gould, the editor of The Atlantic to defend herself from Nuckols's attack. The editor wasn't available to talk to her. It isn't as if Wolf were just some unknown blogger in the hinterlands, she is a best-selling author and a consultant to the presidential campaigns of Bill Clinton and Al Gore.

As for the human-flesh aficionado Nuckols, he has the typical Soros provocateur curriculum vitae: He lived in then-Czechoslovakia from 1990 to 1992 and in Slovakia from 1993 to 1997. Nuckols has traveled throughout Central Europe and he has translated articles from the Czech and Slovak press into English for www.watchingamerica.com. It should be noted that Prague is the headquarters for Soros's eastern European media empire and his minions carry out much of the propaganda efforts once the responsibility of the CIA's Radio Free Europe and Radio Liberty.

Whether it was a joke like Soros's gals stuffing chickens up their vaginas in Russia, Nuckols's "Hufu" human-like soy meat product was treading on a taboo in human society, cannibalism. It is in the same category as child pornography videos using computer-generated child images. Victimless pranks? Not really, a real cannibal like a potential Jeffrey Dahmer might find "Hufu" the necessary triggering device just as computerized child porn might lead someone to experience the real thing. Regardless, when Soros and Sharp combine their operations, only the further degradation of human society can result.

Soros's fingerprints can be seen in the Czech presidential election. One of the dark horse candidates was drama professor and composer Vladimir Franz, who sports head-to-toe tattoos on his body. One way Soros and his gang erode at society is to tear apart traditional institutions. Franz, the circus act, did not win the first round of the elections but his candidacy drew enough votes away from the more left-of-center candidate to ensure that the two top vote recipients for the second round were former Prime Minister Milos Zeman and Foreign Minister Karel Schwarzenberg, both beholden to the European bankers, with Schwarzenberg being a member of European royalty and Zeman being only a little bit less beholden to the moneyed interests.

Chapter 16 - Malaysia in Soros's sights

[This article appeared in WMR on March 4, 2013]

All of a sudden, Malaysia's northern Borneo state of Sabah exploded in secessionist violence a few months away from a scheduled national election pitting the government of Prime Minister Najib Abdul Razak of the long-incumbent Barisan Nasional (BN) party against a George Soros and U.S. National Endowment for Democracy (NED)/CIA-backed opposition leader, Anwar Ibrahim. Ibrahim, a favorite of Soros and his gang of electoral interlopers, has demanded a meeting over Sabah between the government and his Pakatan Rakyat coalition. The United Malays National Organization (UNMO), which dominates the BN coalition government lost its parliamentary two-third majority in 2008 the election, its first major defeat since Malaya gained independence from Britain in 1957. Since 2008, the Soros organizations have been turning up the heat on the Malaysian government.

Essentially, Soros, who has pumped large amounts of money into a Malaysian opposition non-governmental organizations, including a news website called Malaysiokini, is using the same playbook on Malaysia that was used against Yugoslavia: foment internal dissension against the government using the electoral process while applying secessionist pressure on Malaysia in one of its far-flung states.

Sabah was once the colony of British North Borneo. The ancestor of the Sultan of Sulu, who ruled over a Muslim kingdom that consisted of the southern Philippines and Sabah, decided to lease Sabah to the British North Borneo Company in 1888 for a paltry annual remittance. The Madrid Protocol of 1885 relinquished Spain's claim to Sabah but cemented its colonial control over the Sulu archipelago.

When Britain granted North Borneo its independence in 1963, the territory was turned over to Malaysia and not the Sultan of Sulu. The Sultan claims that Malaysian independence and Britain's turnover of Sabah to the Federation of Malaysia in 1963 did nothing to abrogate the original Sulu Sultanate-Great Britain lease agreement, thereby preserving Sulu sovereignty over Sabah. For years, the Philippines government laid claim to Sabah pursuant to the Sulu claim.

Although the Philippines has long claimed Sabah as its territory but the current Sultan, Jamalul Kiram III, a potentate without a realm, felt betrayed by the 2012 Philippines agreement with the Saudi-financed and Salafist-influenced Moro Islamic Liberation Front (MILF) to create an autonomous territory in the predominantly Muslim southern Philippines called Bangsamoro at the expense of the Sulu ruler. The agreement, coupled with the fact that up to a million southern Philippines Muslim Moros, mainly economic refugees, have settled in Sabah with the approval of the Malaysian government, prompted the sultan's younger brother, Agbimuddin Kiram, to launch an "invasion" of Sabah to restore the Sulu Sultanate's claim on the state. In 2010, Muslims represented two-thirds of the population of Sabah up from a little over one-third when Britain cut its ties to Sabah in 1963. Many of the Muslims were permitted to emigrate from the southern Philippines as a way to offset the Christian and Buddhist population of the state. However, the influx of Muslims from the southern Philippines has renewed irredentist claims by the Sulu Sultanate to the territory. The sultan has ample supporters among Sabah's newer immigrants. And that has provided an opportunity for the Soros machinery in the Philippines and NED/USAID professional troublemakers to leap into action on the ground in the Sulu islands and Sabah.

Further muddying the waters is the fact that there are several pretenders to the Sulu sultan's throne and the actual sultan does not control a number of the inhabitants of the Sulu island archipelago in the southern Philippines.

What began as a farcical invasion turned deadly after shooting broke out between members of the Sulu "army" and Malaysian police. Sabah has now turned into a major flash point between Malaysia, the Sulu royalists, and the Philippines that has resulted in charges that the Malaysian opposition leader, working with Soros and NED NGO personnel on the ground, provided the financial backing and weapons for a supposedly renegade faction of the "Royal Army of Sulu" to invade the eastern Lahad Datu district of Sabah, creating a pre-election crisis for the Malaysian government.

The government of Philippines President Benigno

"Noynoy" Aquino III has asked the Sulu rebels to surrender to Malaysian authorities but at the same time it has given a boost to the Sulu rebels by claiming the presidential Malacanang Palace is studying the historical and legal claims of the Sulu Sultan to Sabah. The Philippines has had a dormant claim on Sabah since the creation of Malaysia in 1963 and some observers believe that the Philippines looked the other way when the Sulu rebels launched their seaborne operation in Sabah from Philippines soil. Aquino's mother, Corazon Aquino, launched her revolution against Philippines dictator Ferdinand Marcos after her husband, Benigno Aquino, Jr., was assassinated by Marcos's agents in 1983 after he returned to the Philippines from a self-imposed exile in Boston.

Boston was also the headquarters for themed revolution mastermind Gene Sharp's Albert Einstein Institution, the non-violent revolution think tank that set up shop in 1983, the same year Aquino returned to the Philippines. The Aquino revolution became known as the "yellow revolution" and with its trademark yellow ribbons, clothing, and umbrellas, many observers see it is one of the first modern uses of a themed revolution against a government.

Twelve Sulu invaders and two Malaysian policemen were killed in an initial skirmish. As Malaysia rushed counter-insurgency military units to the state, there were additional deaths reported, as well as hostages being taken by the Sulu rebels. The rebellion spread to two district neighboring Lahad Datuk, Semporna and Kunak.

Soros has an old bone to pick with the still-influential former Malaysian Prime Minister Dr. Mahathir Mohamed, who once charged that Soros used his hedge fund to destabilize the Malaysian ringgit in the 1990s to destroy Malaysia's burgeoning economy. Mahathir also criticized Jewish control over global banking, earning him a swift rebuke from the United States and other nations where the Jewish Lobby has strong influence. Although Soros and Mahathir later publicly patched up their differences, Mahathir has been critical of Soros's "themed revolution" efforts that have dovetailed with the wishes of the CIA and its fronts like NED and the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID). Soros, for his part, criticizes Malaysia's strong currency controls, designed to thwart the currency machinations carried out by Soros in the late 1980s against the Malaysian, Thai, Philippines, and Hong Kong currencies. Referring to Soros, Mahathir said, "It is a Jew who triggered the currency plunge." Mahathir contended Soros punished Malaysia, Thailand, and the Philippines for agreeing to admit Myanmar (Burma) into the Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN). Soros was and continues to be a strong backer of Burmese opposition leader Aung San Suu Kyi.

Mahathir has stated that his one-time deputy prime minister and now opposition leader Ibrahim plans to unleash an Arab spring movement, complete with trademark Soros-funded and Sharp-inspired massive street demonstrations in Malaysia if the opposition comes up short in the scheduled 13th general election.

The Malaysian opposition has admitted to receiving funds from the NED-affiliated National Democratic Institute (NDI) and Soros's Open Society Institute (OSI).

Some Malaysian intelligence analysts believe that Ibrahim and Soros worked together to arrange for the Sulu army invasion of Sabah as a way to undermine one of the ruling party's strongest claims, that it protects Malaysia's national security.

The Malaysian government recently expelled Australian senator Nick Xenophon from Malaysia, accusing him of violating his diplomatic status by working with the Malaysian opposition. Xenophon was elected senator based on a single issue, making illegal the use of poker machines in Australia. Xenophon is known for his media publicity stunts, which are torn from another page in the Soros/Sharp controlled activism playbook.

Mahathir has irritated the CIA by funding the Kuala Lumpur War Crimes Commission trials for George W. Bush and Dick Cheney, held in Malaysia for the two Americans in absentia, over their roles in launching the war against Iraq. Mahathir has also funded various 9/11 truth seminars aimed at pulling the curtain down from the reason given by the United States for invading Iraq and Afghanistan. Soros and the CIA, longtime partners going back to their days of working together to undermine the Soviet Union and its Warsaw Pact allies, have targeted Malaysia for being a holdout in U.S. military designs for the Pacific Rim. Malaysia has shown no desire to host American military bases aimed at curtailing China's growing influence in the region.

However, the Philippines, for which the Sulu rebels have used as a base for their invasion of Sabah, is, once again, hosting the U.S. Seventh Fleet at its old Subic Bay naval base, abandoned in 1992.

U.S. Navy ships are making such a beeline for the Philippines that one if its minesweepers, the USS Guardian, ran aground in environmentally-sensitive waters of the Tubbataha Reef in the Sulu Sea after deploying from Subic Bay. The ship was in the Sulu region in January, just weeks away from the first seaborne incursion of Sulu islanders into Sabah. Some locals are speculating on whether the U.S. Navy was involved in supporting the Sulu islanders' invasion of Sabah. The USS Freedom, America's first littoral combat ship, has been deployed to Southeast Asian waters and is temporarily based in Singapore, near Malaysian waters.

Malaysia, like Yugoslavia, is a diverse federation with nascent secession movements. As such, the Soros and Sharp government overthrow experts appear to be using the same blueprint they employed for Yugoslavia, split the country into smaller entities while applying pressure for the ouster of a nationalist central government in Belgrade. Not only has secession reared its head in Sabah but there are calls for the secession of the other Malaysian state in Borneo, Sarawak, which joined Malaysia the same year that Sabah joined --1963.

The secession clamor in Sarawak is partly fueled by environmental-oriented NGOs that receive financing from Soros and USAID sources. A financial scandal involving Sarawak Chief Minister Abdul Taib Mahmud, a member of the BN coalition, and Deutsche Bank has helped fuel the calls for separation from Malaysia.

There are even calls for peninsular Penang to copy Singapore, once a member of the Malaysian Federation that opted for secession in 1965. The loss of Sabah, Sarawak, and Penang may result in other peninsular sultanates, such as Kelantan, ruled by an Islamist government with ethnic ties to Thai Muslims across the border, opting to go it alone. There are also nascent claims by the Sultanate of Brunei to the federal Malaysian territory of Labuan, an island in the strategic South China Sea that has become an off-shore financial center. Secession would leave Kuala Lumpur and the official capital Putrajaya under pressure to turn over government to the Soros-backed opposition. The Soros-backed opposition is also being accused of fomenting secessionist sentiment in the Borneo states as well as Penang to hasten the downfall of the ruling government and political party.

Chapter 16 - Soros's flag wars

[This article appeared in WMR on April 17, 2014]

Themed revolution guru Gene Sharp and George Soros, the billionaire hedge fund mogul who funnels hundreds of millions of dollars to foreign political pressure groups on behalf of the Central Intelligence Agency, have made a small fortune for flag companies. Perhaps nothing stirs up political and nationalistic emotions more than flags, particularly those which have been either banned or generally suppressed by ruling governments.

As first seen with the Orange Revolution in 2004, a Soros- and CIA-funded Ukrainian revolution that denied presidential winner Viktor Yanukovych the presidency and installed pro-U.S. Viktor Yushchenko and the corrupt Yulia Tymoshenko into power, flags and orange banners were ubiquitous on Kiev's Central Square. In the most recent Ukrainian revolution, revealed by America's bread-distributing maven of European affairs, Victoria Nuland, to have cost the U.S. taxpayers $5 billion, factory fresh red and black Ukrainian Insurgent Army (UPA) flags appeared on Kiev's Central Square, renamed Maidan Square, and throughout Kiev.

The appearance in Kiev of the red and black flag of the World War II army of pro-Nazi Ukrainian nationalist leader Stepan Bandera would be synonymous with the German Nazi flag appearing at protest rallies in Berlin demanding the ouster by force of arms of Chancellor Angela Merkel's government. In the case of the UPA flag, the pro-coup reporters in Kiev for such U.S. government propaganda arms as the Voice of America, National Public Radio, and Radio Free Europe drew the parallels between the UPA flag and the German Nazi swastika flag.

And some Ukrainian Jews have taken up the neo-Nazi Bandera symbology and combined Nazi colors with Jewish symbols. One of these is Ukraine's third richest man, Igor Kolomoiskiy, who was named by the U.S.-backed coup leaders as governor of the largely Russian-speaking eastern Ukrainian region of Dnepropetrovsk. Not only does Kolomoiskiy's trademark shirt display the colors of the neo-Nazi UPA with a Menorah but the Cyrillic word on his shirt reads "Hebrew Bandera," meaning Kolomoiskiy thinks of himself as a Jewish version of the Nazi Ukrainian leader Stepan Bandera. Bandera cooperated with German SS troops in slaughtering tens of thousands of Ukrainian Jews in western Ukraine and Galicia. Kolomoiskiy is now coordinating Ukrainian army attacks on Russian separatists in his jurisdiction.

The Soros/CIA front operatives are also stirring up passions among the largely Muslim Crimean Tatars, many of whom were deported to central Russia and the Far East by Joseph Stalin. Although U.S. propaganda sources claimed that Crimea's Muslim Tatars rejected joining Russia in the referendum that resulted in a large turnout and 97 percent of Crimeans in favor of retrocession back to Russia, voter turnout in Tatar districts was also very high. This points to the majority of Tatars who voted also favoring retrocession. However, the Soros/NED agitators managed to distribute factory new Crimean Tatar flags to certain activists who displayed them on Maidan Square along with the neo-Nazi UPA flags.

In the National Endowment for Democracy- and U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID)-financed themed revolutions in Libya and Syria, factory-new flags of the former regimes that governed both nations appeared practically overnight on the streets of Benghazi, Tripoli, Aleppo, Homs, and Damascus. The flag of the former corrupt Kingdom of Libya was adopted by the CIA-backed Libyan rebels and it now flies as the national flag of the dysfunctional "Republic of Libya." In the case of Syria, the pre-Assad flag is now used by the Salafist-backed Free Syrian Army and is recognized as the flag of Syria by the United States, NATO, and the European Union.

It is clear that Ukraine is merely a stepping stone for the Sharp-indoctrinated and Soros-funded themed revolution activists to achieve their final goal: the toppling of Vladimir Putin's government in Russia. But before that, they must take care of the other remaining European member of Russia's European Union-competing Eurasian Union. That country is Belarus, long governed by the autocratic president Aleksandr Lukashenko. On April 22, the neo-con Woodrow Wilson Center in Washington, headed up by former U.S. Representative and suspected Mossad agent-of-influence Jane Harman, will host a seminar for a number of "civil society" activists from Belarus. The panel is to moderated by former U.S. ambassador to Belarus and Georgia Kenneth Yalowitz, who, like his colleague in Kiev, U.S. ambassador Geoffrey Pyatt, is as ardent a Zionist as Nuland and Harman.

Just as with their pre-World War II ideological mentor, Odessa-born Zionist leader Ze'ev Jabotinsky, American Zionists have forged an alliance with Nazis in Ukraine and elsewhere in eastern and central Europe. It was the "Transfer Agreement" of 1933 between Jabotinsky and German Chancellor Adolf Hitler that paved the way for German Jewish emigration to Palestine. In many ways, Hitler, by agreeing to allow large-scale German Jewish emigration to the British mandate, became a founder of the modern state of Israel. Today, we see modern day Zionists like Nuland and Pyatt making common cause with those who honor one of Hitler's Ukrainian henchman, Bandera.

With Belarus next on the neo-con chopping block, it is a certainty that the post-Soviet white-red-white Belarus flag, changed back to the Soviet-era design by Lukashenko, will soon be reappearing throughout the Belarusian capital of Minsk and other cities. The factory orders were likely placed as Yanukovych fled Ukraine for exile in Russia.

The grand prize for the Sharp/Soros/NED/USAID "nation-busters" is the Russian Federation, which stretches from Kaliningrad, the exclave wedged between Poland and Lithuania, to Sakhalin Island in the Far East. Within the Russian Federation are ethnic nationalists and irredentist movements ripe for agitation by the Soros foot soldiers. We will likely see flag orders being placed at factories for various separatist and ethnic nationalist flags to be distributed throughout the Russian Federation prior to simultaneous uprisings designed to topple the Putin government.

German nationalists who want the Russian region of Kaliningrad restored to German rule as East Prussia have already brandished their Nazi color flag in Kaliningrad. Soros and USAID/NED have likely already placed their orders for these flags to be smuggled into Kaliningrad in the same manner that the neo-Nazi UPA flags were shipped into Ukraine.

With the neo-con-led coup in Ukraine costing American taxpayers $5 billion, the planned revolt in Belarus may cost around $3 billion. But Americans should be prepared to shell out perhaps $50 or more billion for the toppling of the Russian Federation. And, of course, Americans should also be willing to sacrifice their major population centers and tens of millions of lives in the event the neo-cons' latest game of "Risk" goes nuclear.

Chapter 17 - Soros's wars of aggression

[This article appeared in WMR on April 18, 2014]

Perhaps not since the days of Prince Klemens von Metternich and Mayer Amschel Rothschild has the world witnessed a malevolent behind-the-scenes power broker like international hedge fund mogul and national economy manipulator like George Soros. Although Soros has been fairly public about his ultimate goals, which include the dissolution of the Russian Federation and the People's Republic of China, it is his henchmen --those who are employed by his Open Society Foundations and Institute -- who carry out Soros's orders on the ground.

Our intelligence sources in New York recently witnessed first-hand the bilious nature of Soros's operations in eastern Europe and the Middle East. Anthony Richter, associate director of Soros's Open Society Foundations and director of the Middle East and North Africa Initiative, thundered on at a hosted dinner about Russian President Vladimir Putin being a "fascist." and how Soros was behind the recent overthrow of the democratically-elected government of Viktor Yanukovych in Ukraine.

It is also evident that Soros and his gang of coup-makers and economy busters were working hand-in-glove with the U.S. ambassador to Ukraine Geoffrey Pyatt and Assistant Secretary of State for European and Eurasian Affairs Victoria Nuland in "midwifing" the crisis that led to the toppling of the Yanukovych government.

Richter has not only been active in Ukraine and eastern Europe in carrying out Soros's diabolical plans, but has established Soros Foundation operations in Afghanistan and Pakistan, both of which have been wracked by deadly false flag terrorist operations that can be traced back to the CIA and other western intelligence agencies.

Richter's OSF biography states that he has established more than twenty Soros offices in the Eurasian arc of instability extending from eastern Europe to central and south Asia. His Eurasianet and Central Eurasia Project, all Soros funded, have aimed at destabilizing Kazakhstan, Turkmenistan, Kyrgyzstan, Uzbekistan, and Tajikistan on order to bring about the installation of pro-Western and anti-Russian regimes. In fact, the plans for the former Soviet "stans" in central Asia match the template used to twice overthrow governments in Ukraine and once in Georgia.

It is also apparent that it is Soros and his massive tranche of money, much of it ill-gotten, that helps tamp down, in a manner proposed by Cass Sunstein, the husband of U.S. ambassador to the UN Samantha Power, "conspiracy theory" discussions in the media.

For example, Soros has so much invested in the official "story" of 9/11, he has ordered his media and political operatives to shoot down any speculation about either Saudi or Israeli involvement in the attacks of September 11, 2001.

One of Richter's operations, Revenue Watch, which is not only backed by Soros but by former British Prime Minister Tony Blair, Oxfam, RAND Corporation, and Save the Children (the latter three known western intelligence fronts), as well as the World Bank, has actively targeted data on how the oil revenues of Kazakhstan, Azerbaijan, and Iraq are spent. The actual goal of this operation is to bring about instability in all three countries by pinning theft of oil revenues to the governments of Kazakh President Nursultan Nazarbayev, Azerbaijani President Ilham Aliyev, and Iraqi Prime Minister Nouri al-Maliki. From Revenue Watch's advisory boards, a picture can be painted of other Soros associates who have been active in undermining governments in eastern and central Europe, including Scott Horton of Harper's Magazine who is also a close friend of Georgia's Rose Revolution leader Mikheil Saakashvili.

Soros's operatives like the anti-Russia Richter and daughter Andrea Soros Colombel, the founder of the anti-China Trace and Tsadra Foundations, act as the pre-war agitators for later U.S. military aggression. NATO military chief, U.S. Air Force General Philip Breedlove, has been shifting NATO forces to confrontational positions along Russian air, land, and naval defense zones. Meanwhile, the commander of U.S. forces in Okinawa, Marine Corps Lt. General John Wissler has said that his forces could retake the disputed Diaoyu Islands (the Japanese-claimed Senkakus) from Chinese forces if they occupied the islands. Both Breedlove and Wissler are carrying out President Obama's orders, crafted by Soros and his henchmen, that seek a final confrontation with Moscow and Beijing -- a confrontation that could bring about World War III and a civilization-ending nuclear conflagration.

The U.S.- and Soros-financed revolutions in Tbilisi, Kiev, Tunis, Cairo, Benghazi, Damascus, and Sana'a were all preparatory training exercises for the ultimate Western-planned uprisings in Moscow and Beijing.

The desk officers and area specialists at the U.S. State Department may believe that it is they who formulate U.S. foreign policy in countries ranging from Afghanistan to Zimbabwe. However, they receive their marching orders from the unelected and shadowy manipulators of world events who operate with fat salaries from Soros and unimpeded access to the world's corridors of power provided by the Council on Foreign Relations and the Bilderberg Group.

The founders of the United States left us with a weapon to use against the likes of Soros, his daughter, Richter, and other private brigands of foreign policy: the Logan Act of 1799. This act, enshrined in the United States Criminal Code (18 U.S.C. § 95), states:

"Any citizen of the United States, wherever he may be, who, without authority of the United States, directly or indirectly commences or carries on any correspondence or intercourse with any foreign government or any officer or agent thereof, with intent to influence the measures or conduct of any foreign government or of any officer or agent thereof, in relation to any disputes or controversies with the United States, or to defeat the measures of the United States, shall be fined under this title or imprisoned not more than three years, or both.

This section shall not abridge the right of a citizen to apply himself, or his agent, to any foreign government, or the agents thereof, for redress of any injury which he may have sustained from such government or any of its agents or subjects."

It is well past time to apply this law against the American denizens of Soros's various front groups, the Council on Foreign Relations, the Bilderberg Group, the Ukrainian National Association, the American Israel Public Affairs Committee, the Foundation for the Defense of Democracies, and other usurpers of U.S. foreign policy.

Chapter 18 - Soros and Hillary's private email system

[This article appeared in WMR on March 5, 2015]

There is no question that Hillary Clinton and George Soros are very close politically and socially. However, did Mrs. Clinton's tight relationship with Soros result in the multi-billionaire mogul instructing his army of tech-savvy social networking gurus to install the private e-mail server at the Clinton home in Chappaqua, New York that the then-Secretary of State used to communicate privately and outside the purview of the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) and Federal Records Act (FRA) with her closest advisers, many of whom previously worked for Soros's NGOs?

As more details are revealed about the nature of Clinton's email network, these and other questions are being asked about the true nature of Clinton's decision to have her staff, just two months ago, cherry pick through hundreds of thousands of emails and release only 50,000 to 55,000 of those which she and her staffers deemed compliant with the FARA.

Aside from Clinton skirting the intent of the FARA and FRA, White House Press Secretary Josh Earnest could not say whether Clinton's use of a private email system resulted in a security vulnerability. Earnest even directed a question whether Mrs. Clinton linked her private email system to the State Department's classified email system back to the State Department.

Clinton's private email system at her New York residence was registered by an aide named Eric Hothem. However, Internet registration records list his name as Eric Hoteham. The original clintonemail.com domain name was registered by another aide named Justin Cooper. Cooper now works for Teneo Holdings, a firm that advises corporate clients that was co-founded by former Bill Clinton personal assistant Doug Band. Mr. Clinton's and Band's names appeared on the passenger manifests of several flights made with convicted underage sex offender Jeffrey Epstein on his private Boeing jetliner.

Those who defend Clinton's use of the private system claim that it was already in place when she became Secretary of State. However, Internet domain registration records for clintonemail.com show that the domain was registered on January 13, 2009, eight days before she was confirmed as Secretary of State by the U.S. Senate. Obama announced his selection of Clinton as Secretary of State at a December 1, 2008 press conference in Chicago.

The registration records also indicate that updates of the Whois database record for clintonemail.com were made on February 26 and March 5, 2015 just prior to and after the story about the private email broke in The New York Times. Clinton's service provider is Perfect Privacy LLC, a private domain registration firm listing its address in Jacksonville, Florida although its website claims its headquarters is in Atlanta, Georgia. Florida Secretary of State corporation records contain no record for Perfect Privacy LLC of Jacksonville.

It has been reported by The New York Times that those who used the private Clinton email system represented Mrs. Clinton's inner circle of family, friends, and close advisers. They included daughter Chelsea Clinton, who used the pseudonym "Diane Reynolds," and Mrs. Clinton's personal assistant Huma Abedin, the wife of disgraced New York congressman Anthony Weiner who resigned after "sexting" photographs of his genitals to unknown women using the pseudonym "Carlos Danger."[1] Questions are being asked about Mrs. Clinton's use of the private system to help raise money from foreign sources for her and her husband's and daughter's Clinton Foundation, which has been mired in controversy over receiving generous donations from foreign governments.

There are also credible reports that Mrs. Clinton's deputy Secretary of State, James Steinberg, also used the private e-mail along with other top aides at the State Department. After Mrs. Clinton took over the reins at Foggy Bottom, she appointed current Treasury Secretary Jacob Lew as her deputy secretary of State for resources and management. Neither Lew nor Steinberg have commented on what knowledge they had of the private email system although it would have been Lew's responsibility to manage Mrs. Clinton's email usage of the official unclassified and classified email networks.

WMR has learned that the private email system used by Mrs. Clinton is similar to those installed with funding by Soros's Open Society Institute in countries targeted for internal subversion. These private systems, such as the one being installed for Cuba's Jewish community by State Department/U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) contractor Alan Gross, jailed by Cuba for espionage, were developed by Soros's technical personnel as part of his "Internet Training and Access Program (ITAP)." ITAP was designed to permit activists in certain countries to bypass government restrictions on Internet access and communicate between themselves domestically and internationally with foreign colleagues. The ITAP project was underwritten by funding from USAID, the National Endowment for Democracy (NED), and other State Department programs.

It is believed by some observers of State Department operations that Mrs. Clinton's private system may have been used by her top echelon, including then-spokesperson Victoria Nuland, Assistant Secretary of State for Near Eastern Affairs Jeffrey Feltman, Steinberg, and Lew to foment "themed" revolutions, some of which led to civil wars, in the Arab world. The focus of congressional investigators examining clintonemail.com, WMR is told, should be on the other possible users of the system, which, in addition to Steinberg, Nuland, Feltman, and Lew, may also include Bill Clinton, Doug Band, Soros, and NED president Carl Gershman.

Chapter 19 - The anti-Russian machinations of Soros

[This article appeared in WMR on March 17, 2015]

There is a reason for Russian President Vladimir Putin enjoying a whopping 88 percent favorable rating among the Russian people. Putin's success is mostly a result of his steering Russia away from disastrous neo-conservative/Milton Friedman policies brought about by the interference at all levels of Russian politics and economics from post-Soviet minions sent to Russia by George Soros in the early 1990s. The marching orders for hundreds of Soros operatives, most of whom were working under NGO cover, were clear: ensure that Russia never again poses a threat to Western domination over the Eurasian land mass.

Under an incompetent and often-drunk president, Boris Yeltsin, and a corrupt prime minister, Viktor Chernomyrdin, Russia experienced the wholesale sell-off to unscrupulous Russian businessmen state-owned assets of the Soviet Union and Russian Federation.

Many of the businessmen who bought government assets at kopeks to the ruble became overnight billionaires. Later, these businessmen, many of whom arranged for second passports from Israel and the United Kingdom, became known as the "oligarchs." The "great Russian ripoff" was the result of the work of the Gore-Chernomyrdin Commission, which was created out of an agreement between Yeltsin and U.S. President Bill Clinton.

Under a program developed by the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID), the Harvard Institute for International Development (HMD) was given primary responsibility for transforming Russia's state economy to private enterprise. USAID was already working closely with George Soros's Open Society Institute (OSI) and the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) to turn Russia into a free-market Eurasian version of a quasi-dictatorial Latin American republic.

Under the aegis of HMD's Harvard Project, led by Harvard economics professor Andrei Shleifer with the assistance of Larry Summers, Russia's economy underwent "shock therapy." Another shock therapist who advised the Yeltsin-Chernomyrdin regime was Columbia University economics professor Jeffrey Sachs. These neo-con professors applied the same sort of shock therapy, based on unbridled capitalism, not seen since Friedman forced post-Allende Chile, under the military dictator Augusto Pinochet, to adopt his destructive uber-capitalist policies. While Shleifer, a dual Russian-American citizen, advised the deputy prime minister Anatoly Chubais on the sale of state property and was put in charge of Rosimushchestvo (the Committee for the Management of State Property), Sachs advised Prime Minister Yegor Gaidar and Finance Minister Boris Fedorov on transforming Russia from a socialist society to a world-class capitalist market showcase. The Gore-Chernomyrdin Commission and HMD saw the city of Nizhny Novgorod as a testing ground for their libertarian economic policies that earned praise from former British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher. The governor of Nizhny Novgorod who eagerly instituted Harvard's shock therapy was Boris Nemtsov, recently assassinated in Moscow by parties suspected of trying to bring about a violent Ukraine-style "themed revolution" in Moscow. The themed revolution concept, created by University of Massachusetts professor Gene Sharp, has been adopted as a primary tactic by Soros and the CIA to force regime changes around the world.

Nemtsov's "success" in Nizhny Novgorod earned him an appointment as First Deputy Prime Minister in the final years of the Yeltsin administration. Nemtsov stood by Yeltsin in 1993 and cheered on the Russian president's shelling by tank fire of the Congress of People's Deputies, Russia's supreme legislative institution after it moved to impeach Yeltsin. Before anyone sheds tears over Nemtsov's fate, it should be recalled that scores of people were killed inside the parliament, known as the "White House," and hundreds more wounded.

Nemtsov, the "democrat," was a mere thug cheering on other marauding thugs in 1993.

Perhaps the only real accomplishment of Yeltsin was his appointment of Putin as his successor. It is believed by many that in his later years, Yeltsin sobered up enough to realize how he allowed Russian oligarchs and foreign interests to take over Russia in order to bleed it dry of its valuable natural resources and turn its people into low wage slaves. Putin's first order of business after becoming president of Russia was to wrest control of

Russia from the oligarchs who were working hand-in-glove with Soros's OSI; the Harriman Institute at Columbia University, which specializes in Russian, Eurasian and East European studies; HMD; the National Endowment for Democracy (NED); The Carlyle Group (on whose board Soros served); the Ford, Rockefeller, and Heritage Foundations, Helsinki Watch (which later became Human Rights Watch, funded by Soros), and the American Enterprise Institute (AEI) to ensure that the last vestiges of socialism were erased completely from the Russian landscape. These foreign neo-con elements also saw to it that Russia's government virtually demilitarized by allowing Russia's military infrastructure to fall apart. These were the years when Soviet-built ships and submarines rusted away at their moorings, Russian army units became demoralized, and air force planes were sold off on the international market to businessmen who used them for smuggling arms, precious gems, and drugs.

The results of these economic shock policies were disastrous across Russia, except for the few oligarchs who amassed billions of rubles and foreign currency at the expense of Russian workers, pensioners, and the middle class. One Harvard professor, Edward Glaeser, opined that the Harvard Project and its masterminds had not created so much hatred toward Jews in Russia and abroad since the publication of The Protocols of the Elders of Zion.

Putin has certainly had his job cut out for him. One of the first tasks of Soros was to transform Russian education. Just after the fall of the Soviet Union, Soros publishing houses provided the Russian education system with textbooks that lauded privatization, capitalism, and foreign investment. Soros's reeducation of Russian youth was designed to ensure that socialism would never be popular again with future generations of Russians. It was out of these "reeducated" youth that Russia's current, and very much a minority, opposition draws its ranks. Soros's textbooks were also influenced by the CIA, which wanted Russian school-age population to believe that Russia would never again be a great power.

Exiled Russian media tycoon Boris Berezovsky, also known as Platon Elenin, who was suspiciously found hanging in 2013 in the bathroom of his English manor house with a belt tied around his neck after he expressed a willingness to return to Russia to patch up his differences with Putin, was quoted in 1999 by Interfax as saying of Soros and the CIA, "I nearly fainted when I heard a couple of years ago that George Soros was a CIA asset." Berezovsky said that Soros was working with the CIA to undermine Russia because they were "afraid of Russian capital becoming strong." Berezovsky, who worked with other Russian oligarch exiles and billionaire domestic Russian opponents of Putin like jailed and now-exiled former Yukos boss Mikhail Khodorkovsky, as well as Chechen rebels, to undermine Putin would have been a god-send to Russian counter-intelligence had he returned to Russia. Although the Soros media tried to pin Berezovsky's alleged "suicide" on Putin, it was the Soros/CIA nexus who had reason to want Berezovsky dead. Berezovsky was in on the ground floor of the opposition movement to Putin and he knew not only knew "where all the bodies were buried" but, more importantly, where all the money was stashed abroad.

One of the joint CIA/Soros OSI assets, who used the International Crisis Group (ICG), founded by Soros in 1993, as cover, was Fred Cuny. Cuny disappeared in 1995 in Chechnya while reportedly assisting Chechen separatist rebels in their war against Russia. ICG has included on its board a number of Cold War veteran intelligence types, including the rabidly anti-Russian Zbigniew Brzezinski; former NATO commander Wesley Clark, who was willing to shoot it out with Russian troops over control of the vestiges of the former Yugoslavia; and Ronald Reagan national security adviser Richard Allen, who recruited Oliver North for the National Security Council staff.

Although there is evidence that Nemtsov may have been sacrificed by the neo-cons as a way of embarrassing Putin and bringing pressure to bear on his government, there is little doubt that Nemtsov was working with Soros and the CIA to overthrow the Russian government. On November 17, 2010, Nemtsov addressed the Harriman Institute at Columbia. Surrounded by Soros operatives, CIA elements, and other ne'er-do-wells, Nemtsov publicly outlined the plans to overthrow Putin: Nemtsov called for sanctions against Russian leaders over the death of Sergei Magnitsky, a dodgy Russian lawyer, who was awaiting trial on charges of fraud in connection with Russia's largest foreign investment fund, Hermitage Capital. Hermitage was owned by American William Browder, grandson of American Communist Party leader Earl Browder. Earl and William shared something in common: they were both dupes of U.S. intelligence.

Earl wasted no time in denouncing other American communists before the House Un-American Activities Committee and FBI in order to save his own skin.

Nemtsov helped get Congress to enact the for Sergei Magnitsky Act of 2010 which imposed sanctions and U.S. visa bans on 60 Russian officials in the Interior Ministry, Federal Security Service, Federal Tax Service, arbitration courts, general prosecutor's office, and Federal Prison Service. The 60 officials were accused of murdering Magnitsky even though there was not a shred of evidence proving it.

For Nemtsov, the list of 60 sanctioned Russians was insufficient. He wanted it extended to Putin himself and other top Russian officials. If any American political leader urged a foreign parliament to enact sanctions against President Obama, Vice President Biden, and other Cabinet officials, many Americans would call the action treasonous or seditious.

Soros has a single intention when he throws billions of dollars at regime change. He wants to squash anything resembling a state-run or mixed state/private-run economy. Soros believes that all wealth must be held by a few oligarchs like himself. For that reason, any leader who stands in the way of Soros's brand of uber-capitalism, will find himself or herself pressured by street-centered themed revolutions. Putin is refusing to become the latest Soros victim, a list which includes Serbia's Slobodan Milosevic, Haiti's Jean-Bertrand Aristide, Ivory Coast's Laurent Gbagbo, Thailand's Thaksin and Yingluck Shinawatra, Georgia's Eduard Shevardnadze, Ukraine's Viktor Yanukovych, Honduras's Manuel Zelaya, Paraguay's Fernando Lugo, and Kyrgyzstan's Askar Akaev and Kurmanbek Bakiyev.

It is not Putin who stands as a threat to democracy but Soros and his well-paid minions who thrive on shock therapy economies and political turmoil. If anyone should be sanctioned with asset freezes and visa bans it should be one Gyorgy Schwartz, otherwise known as George Soros, and his children Alexander, Gregory, Jonathan, and Robert Soros, and Andrea Soros Columbel. For Russia, the Soros family rose up from the bowels of hell to plague the entire nation.

Chapter 20 - Soros and Kochs team up in Latin America

[This article appeared in WMR on March 19, 2015]

In what could have major ramifications around the world, paid Brazilian protest provocateurs for George Soros have been discovered teaming up with operatives on the payroll of American billionaire brothers Charles and David Koch. After the plan by the CIA and Soros to unseat President Dilma Rousseff, thus drive a knife into the emerging BRICS alliance of Brazil, Russia, China, India, and South Africa, through the aerial assassination last year of presidential candidate Eduardo Campos, Langley has opted for an eastern European-style themed revolution in Brazil. Campos died in a suspicious plane crash that resulted in Rousseff facing off against a Soros operative and Campos's vice presidential running mate, Green Party leader Marina Silva. Rousseff won re-election in a tight race against Aecio Neves, the right-wing candidate who surged past Silva to face Rousseff in the run-off.

Three major groups have joined forces to demand that Rousseff either resign or be impeached from office over charges that her Workers' Party government has engaged in corrupt practices, mostly with regard to Brazil's state-owned Petrobras oil company. The oil company has been eyed for some time by Soros and the Rothschild banking family for whom he fronts globally, as well as the anti-government, libertarian-bent Koch Brothers.

The March 15 [2015] national protests against Rousseff were coordinated across the country in a typical Soros-backed social media operation. In the past, anti-Rousseff activities in the country have also involved U.S. embassy and consular political officers, some using their diplomatic status to mask their Central Intelligence Agency affiliations. Some protest signs called for the Brazilian military to overthrow the Rousseff government. In the past, the CIA was responsible for a number of military takeovers in Brazil.

In a Gene Sharp-like operation, a common protest meme was created that appeared on protest signs and banner: "Fora Dilma!" or "Dilma out!" Other signs said Brazil would not become another Venezuela, a reference to that nation's progressive leftist government of Nicolas Maduro, who has been facing his own Soros- and CIA-backed uprising against his policies. The Obama administration recently called Venezuela and its socialist government a threat to U.S. national security.

The right-wing participants in Brazil's protests are linked directly with the Koch Brothers, particularly the group, "Free Brazil Movement" (Movimento Brasil Livre - MBL). The group is also financed by Warren Buffett's billionaire Brazilian partner, Jorge Paulo Lemann, Brazil's wealthiest man, whose investment group owns Heinz, Budweiser, and Burger King. Lemann has avoided answering questions about his religion, choosing to call himself a "Calvinist." However, his use of the term is in relation to his personal frugality.

Soros-backed groups have used social media to organize Brazilian celebrities to support the anti-Rousseff protests. They include the actors Caio Castro, Malvino Salvador, Marcelo Serrado, Alessandra Maestrini, singer Wanessa Camargo, and former soccer star Ronaldo (Ronaldo Luis Nazario de Lima). The Soros-backed protesters have organized under the banner of the "Come to the Street" movement. They have had a testy relationship with the Koch-backed MBL, especially over calls by the latter for the Brazilian military to overthrow Rousseff in a coup and re-introduce a military dictatorship. The Koch Brothers' activities in Brazil also bring up charges that the two are violating the U.S. Logan Act of 1799, which prohibits Americans from engaging in their own foreign policy.

MBL denies it is funded by Koch Industries but its two main principals, Fabio Ostermann, a member of the Institute of Business Studies and director of the Liberal Institute, and Rodrigo Constantino, who chairs the Liberal Institute and is a columnist for Veja magazine and a founding member of the liberal Institute Milenium (IMIL), are linked to Koch-funded think tanks in other countries, including the neocon Heritage Foundation and American Enterprise Institute in the United States. "Liberal" in the context of these Brazilian groups means "libertarian" of the Ayn Rand variety, a cause supported by the Kochs.

The same "libertarian" fingerprints have been found on staged protests in Ecuador and Argentina. The linkage of Soros and Koch Brothers overseas activities in undermining democratically-elected governments has raised alarm throughout Latin America and around the world.

Mutiny On Line is the central social networking operation being used to coordinate opposition to Rousseff. The group's inspiration comes from Brazilian deputy Jair Bolsonaro, a supporter of a right-wing military coup and a fervent opponent of gay rights and proponent of lowering the legal age of consent. The group rails against "Bolivarianism" in Brazil, a reference to the Bolivarian socialism of Venezuela's government. The group sells anti-Rousseff protest kits on-line which carry the message "God, Family and Freedom."

At the same time staged protests have swept through Brazil and Venezuela, protesters in Ecuador have turned out on the street to protest against the trade policies of President Rafael Correa. Right-wing groups and Soros-backed NGOs have united in their protests against the economic situation brought on by the drop of oil prices but also, curiously, against new import tariffs announced by Correa that are seen as detrimental to the "free trade" aspirations of the wealthy bankers and investor community.

Chapter 21 - Soros hidings migrants' terrorist links

[This article appeared in WMR on November 16, 2015]

Groups like Human Rights Watch, the International Rescue Committee, the International Organization of Migrants, and other non-governmental organizations are spewing forth enormous amounts of disinformation to convince Europe and the rest of the world that there are no Islamic State terrorists among the sea of refugees from Syria, Iraq, and other countries who swamped Europe in recent months.

The NGOs have suggested that those who claim that there are terrorists among the migrants already in Europe are xenophobes and racists ignore the fact that the Islamic State of Iraq and the Levant (ISIL) recently claimed that 4000 of its members had been embedded among the refugees who are already in Europe. ISIL said, before the Friday the 13th ISIL massacre in Paris, that its refugee sleeper agents were under orders to carry out terrorist attacks in retaliation for French military attacks on ISIL positions inside Syria.

George Soros-funded network of non-governmental organizations are advancing the meme that none of the terrorists who went on the killing spree through Paris entered Europe with the masses of refugees. The Soros-owned and -operated Human Rights Watch has suggested that the Syrian passport found next to one of the dead terrorists in Paris was a fake.

Even after French authorities determined that one of the dead terrorists in Paris was, in fact, Ahmad Almohammad, a Syrian refugee from Idlib who entered Europe from Turkey on October 3 through the Greek isle of Leros with a Syrian passport, Soros's operatives cried foul and suggested the Syrian passport was a fake. The Soros gang demanded that the refugee flow from the Middle East, Asia, and North Africa continue unabated despite the bloodshed in Paris, the discovery of an ISIL support cell in the Brussels suburb of Molenbeek, and the arrest in Germany of a Montenegrin man who was driving to Paris with a small arsenal of weapons in his car. Montenegro, like other Balkans countries, have been used as "soft" entry points for Muslim migrants entering Europe from refugee centers in Turkey, Lebanon, and Jordan.

In fact, Almohammad transited from Greece to Macedonia, Serbia, Croatia, Hungary, Austria, and then into Germany and, ultimately, to France. One such call to maintain the current migratory status quo came from the Emergencies Director of Human Rights Watch, Peter Bouckaert.[1] The current European "welcome mat" has enabled terrorists like Almohammed and others to carry out their deadly tasks.

Rick Lyman and Alison Smale, "Paris Attacks Shift Europe's Migrant Focus to Security," The New York Times, November 15, 2015.

It should be noted that in 2010 Soros "leased" Human Rights Watch for $100 million over a ten-year period.

Since that time, the NGO has served Soros's sordid global interests, including undermining the government of Syrian president Bashar al-Assad and concocting phony news reports about "barrel bombs" and chemical weapons attacks by Syria's army. Bouckaert claimed the Syrian passport found on the dead terrorist migrant was fake. Bouckaert had no evidence to back up his statement and his claim turned out to be false.

Because of pressure from groups like Human Rights Watch, Amnesty International, International Organization of Migration, and other Soros-financed geopolitical tools, as well as ISIL propagandist media operations like Al Jazeera, the Syrian government relaxed its stringent passport renewal policies after it was criticized for doing nothing to help Syrians who had fled the civil war ravaging the country. In April 2015, Syrians abroad, even those who left the country illegally, members of exiled opposition groups, and Syrians who dodged the military draft, were permitted to renew their Syrian passports at Syrian consulates in Turkey, Greece, Lebanon, and the United Arab Emirates. This was a direct concession by Assad to the Syrian opposition before peace talks were due to commence in Geneva.

The Syrian opposition claimed that Assad's government was somehow responsible to provide the refugees with passports because they fled their homes so fast, they had no time to collect identity papers, birth records, and other documents, including passports. Syrian government consulates and embassies were extremely liberal in providing anyone claiming to be a Syrian refugee with passports and other documents, including "family booklets" that record all the names of a Syrian citizen's family members.

It was in Greece where Almohammad was issued his emergency Syrian passport, which Human Rights Watch misrepresented as counterfeit. Is Human Rights Watch perhaps trying to divert attention away from the fact that terrorists are obtaining valid passports to enter Europe?

HRW and other Soros-influenced NGOs also forced suspension of the Dublin II rules. The rules require the forcible return by European Union member states of a refugee to the country where he or she first entered European Union territory. Germany suspended the rules and claimed responsibility for any refugee, including those who first entered European Union space through Greece. Almohammad is a prime example of Germany providing cover for an ISIL terrorist. Almohammad was in Germany before he traveled to France.

George Soros certainly shares in the civil liability for the ISIL terrorists arriving in France amid the throngs of refugees from the Middle East. Soros's current realtime net worth is $24.5 billion. That is more than enough to pay compensation to the families of the Friday the 13th massacre victims and other victims from past and future terrorist attacks carried out by ISIL "refugees" who entered Europe courtesy of Soros's various migrant assistance programs.

Chapter 22 - Soros calling the shots on lame duck Obama's Syria policy

[This article appeared in WMR on November 19, 2015]

Next to the Islamic State, George Soros and his international army of disinformation agents, ne'er-do-well non-governmental organizations, and government agents-of-influence is probably the greatest threat to global peace today. The latest Soros meme, being echoed by his acolytes and financial beneficiaries Barack Obama and Hillary Clinton, is that Americans should disregard the Islamic State's promise of embedding 4000 of its battle-hardened terrorists among the throngs of refugees escaping the U.S.-backed Islamist uprisings in Syria and Iraq.

Republican and Democratic U.S. governors, legislators, and candidates for office are now being demonized as "un-American" and "racists" by Soros-directed social media outlets because they are urging restraint on accepting at least 10,000 Syrian refugees into their states and communities. Many elected officials rightly believe that based on the entrance into the United States of several Al Qaeda members prior to 9/11, with some taking flight training in violation of their tourist visas, the federal government simply cannot be trusted to adequately vet the refugees. The Soros operatives are suggesting that anti-immigrants are denying sanctuary to innocent children. They fail to admit that it was their benefactor, Soros, who cost the lives of thousands of children when he backed the violent overthrow, via so-called "Arab Spring" rebellions, of the governments of Libya, Tunisia, Egypt, Syria, and Yemen.

Stung by the fact that one of the Paris terrorists who committed suicide, Ahmad Al-Mohammad, was, indeed, carrying an emergency Syrian passport issued by a Syrian consular officer on the Greek island of Leros, the Soros gang and its Central Intelligence Agency superiors advanced the bogus meme that Al-Mohammad's passport was fake. The Syrian consular official who arrived on Leros was responding to Western charges that Bashar al-Assad's government was doing nothing to provide transit documents for Syrian refugees he was charged with creating.

WMR has learned from informed U.S. military intelligence sources that Obama continues to militarily support Islamic State forces in Syria against Assad's government, which Obama continues to refer to as "the regime" even as he maintains the Islamic State is "contained" in Syria and Iraq. U.S. Special Forces, we have learned, recently took heavy casualties after they were ordered by the Pentagon to act as "human shields" protecting Islamic State forces in northwestern Syria against a Russian air assault.

Obama and his Soros and CIA propagandists are also throwing cold water on countless news stories about Islamic State terrorists being embedded among Syrian refugee ranks. This embedding has been taking place since Moroccan national Abdelmajid Touil, involved in arming Islamic State or "Daesh" terrorist attack in Tunis last March, was arrested in Milan after traveling from Libya by boat masquerading as a refugee.

Turkish counter-intelligence agents recently arrested eight Moroccans in Istanbul who were prepared to travel to Izmir, Turkey, and then by boat to Greece, disguised as refugees. The Moroccans were prepared to travel via the same migrant route used by hundreds of thousands of other migrants -- from Greece, to Macedonia, Serbia, Hungary, Austria, and then Germany. Two of the dead suicide bombers in Paris were found to be carrying fake Turkish passports and they may have traveled through the Balkans via the same mass migratory route used by hundreds of thousands of others from the Middle East killing fields.

There are other Balkans routes being used by terrorists masquerading as refugees. Bavarian police arrested a Montenegrin national, known only as "V.V.," who was traveling by car through Bavaria en route to Paris with a cache of weapons believed to have been for use by Islamic State terrorists in the recent attacks. Bavarian Premier Horst Seehofer, who has been opposed to the mass migration of mainly Muslim refugees into Germany from the Middle East, contradicted claims from Montenegro, a virtual vassal state of Soros and the Rothschild banking family, that "V.V." was not connected to the Paris attacks.

This Montenegrin claim mirrors other Soros-initiated disinformation campaigns that downplay the threat from refugees and their Soros-financed support groups in the Balkans, a bevvy of Soros socio-political and media operations. A few days after the arrest of the Montenegrin national in Bavaria, a Sunni jihadist, shouting "Allahahu Akbar" or "God is great," opened fire on Bosnian soldiers in Sarajevo, killing two and wounding others.

The Paris suicide bomber Al-Mohammad was processed through the migrant transit center in Presovo, Serbia. The Balkans has served as Europe's "soft underbelly" for the Islamic State invasion of Europe. Ironically, many of the countries now beset by home grown jihadist terrorists originally urged them to travel to Syria and Libya to overthrow their secular socialist governments. Now, these same jihadists, along with other mercenaries from around the world, aided and abetted for years by the CIA, Saudis, Qatar, Turkey, Muslim Brotherhood, Al Qaeda, and Daesh, have returned to Europe to unleash their fury.

On November 17, Greek authorities on the island of Kos, which has served as a transit point for a number of refugees streaming into mainland Europe, arrested two Syrian military draft-age males suspected of being jihadists. Their smart phones contained photos of Islamic State paraphernalia. The two Syrians were trying to pass themselves off as refugees. In what may not be a coincidence, the most violent Greek terrorist group is the Revolutionary Organization 17 November, which has carried out a number of terrorist attacks in Greece over the past several decades and is believed to be linked to NATO "Gladio" false flag operations.

The Soros operations, along with a number of fake "progressive" groups in the United States, have issued stinging denunciations of U.S. governors who want a moratorium on Syrian refugee resettlement in the United States. In addition to some 30 Republican state governors, plus the governor of Guam, who support a moratorium, New Hampshire Democratic Governor Maggie Hassan and former Ohio Democratic Governor Ted Strickland, both running for U.S. Senate seats, support a moratorium. The Soros gangsters have now taken aim at Hassan and Strickland, in addition to the Republican governors. From the Daily Kos website to the Center for American Progress and Soros mouthpieces like radio show host Thom Hartmann, the pro-moratorium Republicans and Democrats have been on the receiving end of vicious attacks by the so-called "left."

The attacks against the governors and others is similar to that being leveled by the Soros machine against European leaders opposed to the mass migration of Syrian and other refugees into Europe. In addition to Bavaria's Seehofer, the Soros media machine has singled out Hungarian Prime Minister Viktor Orban, Poland's new Prime Minister Beata Szydlo, Slovenian Prime Minister Miro Cerar, Serbian Labor Minister Aleksandar Vulin, and even small-town mayors in Slovenia, Poland, and Germany who have complained about a host of problems with the migrants. Chief among the complaints are the breakdown of public security, defecation and urination by migrants in public places, harassment of European women and young girls, and the threat of terrorism. It is not coincidental that those European leaders being criticized the most for their anti-immigration stands are also those who favor a rapprochement with Russia. The Soros-funded group Pussy Riot and other street action groups promoted by Soros, including gay, lesbian, and transgender proponents whose standard-bearer is the Austrian bearded drag queen "Conchita Wurst," have rallied to Soros's call for open borders and a mass refugee influx.

Chapter 23 - Soros's "Partition Studies"

[This article appeared in WMR on May 16, 2012]

Among George Soros-financed non-governmental organizations and think tanks, as well as United Nations and CIA officials, there have been a spate of conferences and closed-door meetings dealing with "partition studies" and "partition theory." Informed sources have reported to WMR that there is currently an agenda to cherry pick what nations will be divided into more manageable nation-states to ensure their subservience to Western interests.

Many seminars on future partition of nation-states are couched in academic-oriented reviews of ethnic conflicts and post-conflict resolution with an emphasis on the partition of India and Pakistan, Cyprus, Palestine and Israel, Yugoslavia, Ireland, Ethiopia and Eritrea, and Sudan and South Sudan.

The "partition" studies and reviews, however, are masks for future partition of countries like India, Myanmar (Burma), Sri Lanka, Indonesia, Democratic Republic of Congo, Libya, Syria, Iraq, and, more importantly, China and Russia. Many of the partition conferences and meetings have openly discussed the partition of Libya into three nations -- Tripolitania, Cyrenaica, and Fezzan. Cyrenaica's autonomy has already been declared by Saudi-supported Salafist elements in Benghazi, a move that may presage a total declaration of independence. There have also been discussions about the further partition of Sudan with Darfur declaring independence.

Celebrities like George Clooney, Angelina Jolie, and others have been used as "useful idiots" in pushing for the independence of certain regions, including South Sudan and Darfur.

The Council on Foreign Relations (CFR) has been heavily involved in hosting partition studies seminars. At the United Nations, there have been a number of partition meetings at which CIA and U.S. State Department officials have been in attendance.

Conversely, the Soros, CFR, CIA, and Soros-financed NGO network has also discussed methods to keep some nation-states as unitary entities or form federal unions. The recent move by Saudi Arabia and Bahrain to form a union that would eventually include Qatar, the United Arab Emirates, Oman, and Kuwait is one such initiative by the network of globalist movers and shakers. Qatar, Oman, and Kuwait managed to put the plans on temporary hold because they fear they would be absorbed by Saudi Arabia as virtual provinces. To the south of the Gulf states, the globalist interests have managed to demonize the South Yemen independence restoration movement by linking it with "Al Qaeda in the Arabian Peninsula," a group that exists only in the minds of its CIA, MI-6, and Mossad creators.

U.S. Africa Command (AFRICOM) advisers are busy providing training and weapons to African "peacekeeping" forces whose mandate is to reunite Somalia into a unitary state. The independence of Somaliland and the autonomy of Puntland, two Somali regions in northern Somalia is seen as short-lived until a strong government can be re-established in Mogadishu, the Somali capital.

The globalist cartographers have also decided that secessionist movements by Tuaregs in Mali and southern tribes in south Nigeria will not be tolerated. Also being actively opposed by the globalists are the string independence movements in the European Union, particularly those in Scotland, the Basque region, Catalonia, and Flanders.

Chapter 24 - How Soros conquered the "Fourth World"

[This article appeared in WMR on October 25, 2012]

The Unrepresented Nations and Peoples Organization (UNPO) was established in 1991 to represent nations which, failing to possess actual statehood, could not have representation in the United Nations. These "unrepresented" nations and peoples, including nations with secessionist ambitions, have often been referred to as the "Fourth World" to distinguish them from the independent but poor Third World states.

Shortly after UNPO was established, with its headquarters in The Hague, the non-governmental organization (NGO) domineering George Soros began to infiltrate UNPO in order to steer its goals into a framework that would not endanger Soros's hedge fund investments and assist with Western destabilization plans for countries like China, Russia, Myanmar, and other nations. In fact, some critics of UNPO point out that its original founders, Tsering Jampa of the Tibetan government-in-exile, the Dalai Lama's lawyer Michael van Walt van Praag, and Uighur separatist leader Erkin Alptekin, formed UNPO as a cover for anti-Chinese separatist activities. In fact, UNPO has expanded its membership to include the separatist Inner Mongolian People's Party, which seeks independence for the Mongol minority in northern China.

The Dalai Lama was key to UNPO's early creation and UNPO patterned its campaign for independence for its members after the Dalai Lama's long campaign for Tibetan independence.

UNPO's current president is Tibetan independence activist Ngawang Choepel, a Tibetan musician and filmmaker and former political prisoner whose cause has been supported by such celebrities as Annie Lennox and Paul McCartney. Lennox and McCartney have also supported the cause of the George Soros and U.S. Agency for International Development/National Endowment for Democracy-funded "Pussy Riot" hooligans in Russia.[12]

UNPO's Secretary General is another individual connected to Soros and Sharp activities in Europe and elsewhere, Marino Busdachin, an Italian human rights activist who was involved in demonstrations against Communist rule in Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union in the 1980s. In the 1990s, Busdachin worked in the United States pushing for war crimes tribunals for Yugoslav and Rwandan leaders. Busdachin was a member of the Italian Transnational Radical Party, which has sued the signature Soros/Sharp clenched fist in its party's signage. The party includes separatists from [12] Soros also supports another group, Independent Diplomat, which assists separatist movements with diplomatic recognition. Among those receiving help from Independent Diplomat are Somaliland, Kosovo, the Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus, and Western Sahara. Independent Diplomat also helped provide diplomatic assistance to the National Coalition Government of the Union of Burma, a Burmese government-in-exile headquartered in Rockville, Maryland.

East Turkestan (Uighurstan) in China, Chechnya, southern Vietnam, Laos, Albanian region of Macedonia, and democracy activists from China and Vietnam. The Transnational Radical Party is very much a Soros- and CIA-funded operation. Busdachin has headed UNPO since 2003. His predecessor was Karl von Hapsburg-Lothringen, of the former royal family of Austria-Hungary. Hapsburg is the heir pretender to the Austro-Hungarian Empire throne and a member of the conservative Austrian People's Party.

Where autonomy and separatist movements threaten the financial interests of Soros and his Rothschild family overseers, UNPO has suspended membership. Groups suspended by UNPO include the Australian Aborigines (whose native land is sought by Australian and foreign mining interests), the ethnic groups of Burma, Buryatia, the Greek Minority in Albania, Cabinda, Chechnya-Ichkeria, Inkeri, Kalahui Hawaii, Karenni State, Khalistan, Komi, Maasai (Kenya), Mari, Mon, Nahua del Alto Balsas (Mexico), Scania, Shan, Tsimshian, Tuva Republic, and West Papua. After it declared itself independent, the Lakotah Nation's membership was discontinued. Tatarstan, Kumykia, Nuxalk, Maohi, Sakha, Ingushetia, Gagauzia, Chuvashia, Bougainville, Bashkortostan, Aceh, and others also saw their membership discontinued.

Active members of UNPO include Tibet, Ahwaz, East Turkestan, Balochistan, Hmong, Inner Mongolia, Kurdistan, Kosovo, Montagnard, Sindh, Somaliland, and South Azerbaijan, regions where the CIA and Soros are very active in destabilization efforts.

For Soros and Sharp and their CIA interlocutors, the Fourth World is the same as the Third World when it comes to covert operations and fomenting rebellion.

Chapter 25 - Pouring gasoline on the Balkans powder keg

[This article appeared in WMR on May 7, 2015]

The "color revolution" maestro team of Assistant Secretary of State for European/Eurasian Affairs Victoria Nuland and global hedge fund tycoon George Soros have given the final green light to their operatives in Macedonia to stage an uprising against the government of Prime Minister Nikola Gruevski. This move follows an attempt to embarrass Gruevski's government by the release of the transcripts of intercepted phone calls of 20,000 Macedonian citizens, including political leaders and journalists by the U.S.-and Soros-supported Macedonian opposition. The collection of the calls was well-beyond the technical capabilities of the Macedonian intelligence service and there are suspicions that the U.S. and/or German intelligence services were behind the surveillance and the leak of the phone calls to the Macedonian opposition and media. Gruevski and his government have called the leak of the surveillance information a part of a blackmail operation directed against the government. Gruevski ordered the detention of five opposition figures connected to the blackmail case.

By staging a color revolution in Macedonia, Nuland and Soros stand to re-ignite the ethnic conflicts fostered by the Clinton administration's foolhardy and bloody military engagements of the 1990s against Serbia and ethnic Serbs living in Bosnia, Croatia, and Kosovo.

The two main Nuland operatives in Macedonia are Zoran Zaev, the leader of the opposition Social Democratic Union of Macedonia (SDSM) and his predecessor as SDSM leader, former prime minister and president Branko Crvenkovski. Both leaders are now urging their supporters to hit the streets of Skopje and other cities, including Strumica, where Zaev also serves as mayor, to commence a Ukrainian Maidan Square-styled coup d'etat with Macedonia Square as the central focal point of the uprising.

In typical Soros-style color revolution procedures, the Macedonian opposition has highlighted a "martyr" to their cause. In 2011, when the VMRO DPMNE party celebrated their electoral victory in Skopje, a policeman allegedly beat to death a 22-year old VMRO DPMNE election victory celebrant named Martin Nesvkovski. There is now some doubt as to whether the special policeman convicted of the murder was even on duty that particular evening. However, "Nevkovski" has become a rallying cry for the Soros-financed opposition even though he was supposedly cheering on the victory of the very same government that the Soros operatives are now trying to overthrow.

The opposition to Gruevski's government has been joined by two of the major Soros-funded media operations in Macedonia, the television networks "Telma" and "24 Vesti." They helped stoke recent violent protests directed at the government on Macedonia Square in central Skopje, demonstrations that saw 36 of the 40 total injured in the melees in front of the government headquarters in Skopje identified as police officers. One SDSM leader, Radmila Shekerinska, was witnessed at a cafe near the protest venue issuing instructions to protesters to forcibly enter the government buildings.

The Soros-operated Radio Free Europe ran with the following incendiary report from Skopje:

"Violent clashes broke out May 5 at a midnight demonstration in the Macedonian capital, Skopje, where at least 1,000 people gathered to protest the 2011 murder of a man beaten by police during postelection celebrations. At least 19 people were injured, including 15 police officers and a photographer. Police used tear gas and water cannon to disperse the protesters, who chanted 'Murderers! Murderers!' and demanded the government's resignation. Protesters threw objects and broke windows of the government building, crashed cars parked nearby, and torched several containers. Social Democrat Zoran Zaev, Macedonia's opposition leader, accused Prime Minister Nikola Gruevski of attempting to cover up the death of Martin Neskoski [sic], who died celebrating Gruevski's election win. Zaev released audio recordings in which he said the prime minister and other officials discuss how to cover up the killing."

It is noteworthy how Radio Free Europe understated the number of police officers injured and failed to report on the external agitation behind the riots. Also, why would Gruevski and his senior security officials want to cover up the death of one of the ruling party's own supporters?

The real reason behind the attempt to stage a color revolution in Macedonia is that the ethnically-diverse country, where a third of the population is ethnic Albanian, is seen as the weakest link in the planned Turkish Stream pipeline that will transport natural gas from Russia through Turkey, Greece, Macedonia, Serbia, and Hungary into central Europe. Serbian prime minister Aleksandar Vucic has been called to Washington where Vice President Joe Biden, Kerry, Nuland, and company are poised to bring about additional pressure on Serbia to abandon its nascent alliance with the other Turkish Stream partners or face rejection of full Serbian membership in the European Union and NATO. In return for Vucic abandoning the Turkish Stream deal with Russia, the United States is offering to build a new gas terminal on Krk island in Croatia that would deliver by ship natural gas from Qatar, Algeria, and the United States. However, Croatia and Serbia are old foes and Serbia would be dependent on Croatia for its gas supplies instead of the more friendly nations and its traditional allies of Macedonia, Greece, and Russia.

Biden, Kerry, and Nuland are hoping to see Serbia and Macedonia, as well as Greece and Hungary, abandon the Turkish Stream in the same manner that Bulgaria's announcement that it would not permit the South Stream pipeline to cross its borders to transport Russian natural gas from a pipeline under the Black Sea sealed the fate of that project. It should also be noted that R. Hunter Biden, Biden's son, is heavily involved in the natural gas industry in Europe through his employment by Burisma Holdings, Ltd., a natural gas firm owned by Ukrainian-Jewish oligarch Ihor Kolomoisky.

NATO has also recently temporarily moved its Allied Joint Force Command headquarters from Naples to Cincu in central Romania as a warning to not only Russia over Ukraine but Serbia and Macedonia over the Turkish Stream pipeline deal. The NATO command in Cincu also controls the NATO Kosovo Force (KFOR) that is headquartered at Camp Bondsteel in Kosovo. The Kosovo-Macedonia border has recently witnessed border provocations by Kosovo Liberation Army (KLA) personnel that could not have been carried out without the knowledge and acquiescence of NATO and the American military at Bondsteel.

But Russia and China are staging joint naval exercises in the Mediterranean in mid-May to warn Washington and its allies that any attempt to interfere with both Turkish Stream and the Balkans route of China's Silk Road project can face the combined military might of the two Eurasian political, economic, and military giants. Although the joint naval drills are the fourth between the two regional superpowers, it is the first time they have been conducted in the Mediterranean, a sea that NATO considers to be its own "private lake."

Nuland and company have already instructed the SDSM and other opposition leaders that their first order upon seizing power from the democratically-elected government will be to drop the name of their country, Macedonia, in order to placate Greece, which has always objected to the name based on irredentist fears about the Macedonian population of its northern region of Thessaloniki (Salonica) wanting to unite with their kinfolk to the north. Nuland has apparently been conspiring with Jews in Israel and the United States, whose families emigrated from Thessaloniki (Salonica), to help stir up tensions on both sides of the Greek and Macedonian borders over the country name issue.

Nuland and her co-conspirators now stand ready to toss a lighted match on Macedonia and the entire Balkans region. They could not do any more damage if they personally set fire to the Turkish Stream natural gas pipeline.

Chapter 26 - Soros's Adjara takeover

[This article appeared in WMR on August 16, 2008]

The George Soros- and neocon-contrived government of Mikheil Saakashvili, supported by the United States and Israel, pulled off the seizure of another and almost-forgotten Georgian autonomous republic before it attempted to move in and seize South Ossetia and Abkhazia.

During the administration of Georgian President Eduard Shevardnadze, Adjara enjoyed the same degree of autonomy as that of South Ossetia and Abkhazia. But, unlike its two autonomous counterparts, Adjara does not have a border with Russia. Adjara, a majority Muslim republic -- its inhabitants known as "Georgian Muslims" -- became the first target for post Rose Revolution President Mikheil Saakashvili. Georgia's Hebrew-speaking and dual Georgian-Israeli Minister for "Reintegration" Temur Yakobashvili.

Saakashvili and Yakobashvili ordered street demonstrations against Adjara's locally-popular President Aslan Abashidze. Adjara's 2004 "mini-Rose Revolution," orchestrated by George Soros's gang of democracy manipulators, drove Abashidze from the Adjaran presidency and he was forced to flee, like Shevardnadze, to Russia. Abashidze earned the wrath of Soros and the neocons by acting as Shevardnadze's envoy to mediate the dispute between Georgia and Abkhazia. Any suggestion of the continuity of autonomy for Abkhazia is anathema to the plans of the anti-Russian Soros and his various European nongovernmental organization (NGO) entities.

Russia's 12th Military Base in the Adjaran port capital of Batumi was forced to leave the base by Saakashvili and Yakobashvili, after having threatened to block access to the base. Before Russia turned over the base to Georgia in 2007, there were a series of incidents in which Georgian authorities detained Russian soldiers stationed at the Batumi base. Russia accused Georgia of provocations in the incidents. The actions by Saakashvili's government against Adjara and Russia represented provocations that receive little attention by the Western corporate media.

Saakashvili installed as his Adjaran puppet leader Levan Varshalomidze, the son of the Director General of the National Oil Company of Georgia, Guram Varshalomidze.

To solidify its claim on Adjara, Georgia moved its Constitutional Court from Tbilisi to Batumi. The Adjaran flag was also changed and the flag of Saakashvili's National Movement, ordered adopted as the national flag of Georgia, was placed in the canton of the new Adjaran flag, an affront to Adjara's Muslim population.

Today, Adjara represents what a Georgian-occupied South Ossetia or Abkhazia would resemble: opposition party leaders are held as political prisoners, the electoral code favors Saakashvili's political allies, strict censorship has been imposed by Adjara's quisling government on Adjara TV, and Varshalomidze's relatives have been appointed to top government positions merely because of their loyalty to Saakashvili. Varshalomidze's only qualifications for office is that he was Saakashvili's college buddy in Kiev. Varshalomidze, Saakashvili, and Georgia Development and Reform Fund head Konstantine Kublashvili all represent family clans who were propelled into political power by Soros financial grants.

Soros's role in the Adjaran takeover by Saakashvili was apparent in the involvement of the Soros-funded Caucasus Institutive for Peace Development and Democracy and the Soros Foundation in Tbilisi in stoking the flames in Batumi.

Shalva Natelashvili, the leader of the opposition Labor Party, has said that Saakashvili always planned to turn over the port of Batumi and customs in Adjara to Soros to further the so-called progressive billionaire's profits.

Elections are scheduled on October 4 for Adjara's Supreme Council. No one who is not in the back pocket of Saakashvili and his patron Soros expects the election to be fair. The Labor Party of Adjara is boycotting the election. Georgia's English-language newspaper The Messenger interviewed Adjarans about the forthcoming rigged election in Adjara. Giorgi, an ecologist in Batumi, expressed the majority opinion in stating why he would not vote:"... there's no point. Everyone knows that the Nationals (ruling party) will win."

There is another reason why Soros and his minion Saakashvili wanted to rout Abashidze from power in Adjara. The exiled Adjaran leader is a close friend of Hillary Rodham Clinton's two brothers, Hugh and Tony Rodham. Tony Rodham is a godfather to one of Abashidze's grandchildren. The connection between Abashidze and Clinton's brothers was too much for Soros, who has bankrolled Clinton's rival Barack Obama. Soros also saw a Clinton victory and presidency as a sure bet that Abashidze would return to power in Adjara and use the republic as a base to toss out Saakashvili and his Soros-backed government. For Soros, what happens in Democratic politics in the United States directly affects his operations in the Caucasus region and in other parts of the world.

AFTERWORD

In the Bond movie SPECTRE, Blofeld, the ultimate head of the worldwide criminal and terror organization, is permitted to live in order to face trial for his many crimes. In real life, it is Soros who controls, through his minions and dupes, the International Criminal Court (ICC) in The Hague. Soros determines the fates of governments and their leaders. Soros particularly preys upon leaders in Africa and the Balkans in seeking ICC indictments. In almost every nation that has seen a Soros-inspired change of government, the vanquished leaders are indicted by Soros's friends in The Hague. This has been the case in Liberia, Sierra Leone, and Ivory Coast

Kenya, whose president Uhuru Kenyatta and Vice President William Ruto were indicted by the ICC, has witnessed Soros's judicial malfeasance at the international level. The criminal case against Kenyatta fell apart and the ICC's indictment against Ruto floundered. Kenya has threatened to pull out of the ICC. It is clear that from the very outset, the ICC was being misused by Kenyatta's and Ruto's political opponents in the Soros-backed Orange Democratic Movement to tie up the Kenyan leaders in endless court hearings and eventually imprison them in The Hague.

In November 2015, Hungarian Prime Minister Viktor Orban, a one-time Soros acolyte, accused the Hungarian tycoon of decimating European nation-state sovereignty with the migrant invasion from the Middle East. Orban said of Soros's do-gooder groups and the migrant crisis, "They make a living off the crisis."[13]

[13] Monica Showalter, "The Hungarians have George Soros' number," Investor's Business Daily, November 4, 2015.

Soros urged German Chancellor Angela Merkel and other European leaders to accept even more migrants and reject the nationalist fervor coming from Orban and like-minded European leaders. After inviting the migrant invasion, Merkel's popularity in Germany plummeted.

Orban was keenly aware that Soros was bankrolling an operation called the "Hungarian Project" that was trying to sway public opinion against Orban and his center-right political party. Soros's efforts were for naught because Orban maintained an 80 percent favorability rating among Hungarians.

For an international villain like Soros, it matters not what the majority of a country believes. Soros feels that his money and political influence, regardless of popular support, can ramrod through his agenda. If he were alive today, Ian Fleming would find it difficult not to include George Soros in the rogues' gallery of James Bonds's arch-foes.

International hedge fund tycoon George Soros is the closest the world has ever witnessed to a true James Bond-like villain. Bond creator Ian Fleming could never have dreamt that one day a composite of some of his most evil and dangerous nemeses would be personified in an actual person. Yet, Soros's international exploitative operations are a carbon copy of those of many of Bond's enemies. This book recounts over ten years of news reports about Soros, an actual "quantum of chaos."

From the killing fields of Libya and Syria to the steppes of central Asia and from the gold and diamond mines of Africa to the trading floors of Wall Street, the effects of Soros's "quantum of chaos" are revealed. Moreover, the reader will understand that Soros has held sway over at two American presidents - Bill Clinton and Barack Obama - and stands to dictate the policies of another Oval Office hopeful, Hillary Rodham Clinton.

Unlike the world of Ian Fleming, there is no James Bond to rescue us from the evil plans of Soros. Only an informed public can do that and this book offers a glimpse into the shadowy world of Soros's "quantum of chaos."
